Destitution in Near East Supplies Great Problem And Also Provides Lesson DESTITUTION in the Near East is ably described in the Christian Science Monitor. It says the statement made recently to the eastern bureau of that paper by Dr. James L. Barton, of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, as to the present and future needs of the committee, if the destitution prevailing in the Near East is to be adequately met, or even mitigated, is deserving of the utmost attention. It is not only that the call to relieve the necessities of those peoples is urgent to the last degree. The matter is important also because any just appreciation of the situation cannot fail to bring with it a fuller realization of the obligation which is of necessity being laid upon the Allies to relieve the distresses of the war. There is a call that this work of relief shall be done on an unparalleled scale, and hence who will contemplate the situation with any care will recognize the fact that the call will be more insistent than ever now that the war is over. The belief that war conditions came to end over night, on the conclusion of peace, is a misconception that persists, and, if for no other reason, because they do much to dissipate this belief the figures afforded by Dr. Barton are peculiarly valuable.

It is, however, the immediate appeal of Dr. Barton's statement which must claim first place. The figures are eloquent. In Asia Minor alone, Dr. Barton estimates that there are some 3,850,000 refugees, of whom about 925,000 are within reach of the distributing forces of the committee. These people are, for the most part, destitute; that is to say, they are without food, clothing, or housing of any kind. The rest of them are wandering about a countryside which has been swept clean of every edible root, or are crowded into towns and villages where only the most pressing needs of these refugees will cost about $60,000,000 a year, and that when the work is carried out in the most economical and far-sighted way, insuring that every beneficiary shall do as much as he can toward his own maintenance, and that he shall become self-supporting at the earliest possible moment.

When this is done, however, only the vestige fringe of the matter has been touched. The rest of the matter is, in fact, a vast, unending task. Dr. Barton says, "Into the developments of the next twelve months, and there is every reason to believe that political, military, and other changes will be made which will render accessible the larger portion of all the 3,000,000 that are just now inaccessible. Unless we are at this time to save and provide for this large number of refugees, the cost of doing this will be $200,000,000 a year." Now, it is well to face the facts of the situation, just as they stand, the more so as the urgent needs of the Near East are pretty accurately known, but the destitution of the Near East must be only a very small part of the destitution obtaining throughout immense areas of Europe, areas concerning the conditions in which little or nothing is known. From Russian Poland, however, from Bosnia-Herzegovina, from Serbia and Roumania, from the vast sections of European Russia, to say nothing of Belgium and Northern France, something more than rumors have come showing the state of deliberately imposed destitution and deliberately created desolation such as the world has never known since the days, seven centuries ago, when the "Arab" host swept out of Asia and over Europe, spreading ruin and rapine broadcast.

It is not easy to grasp what this means. But if the cost of ministering to the needs of the comparatively small number of refugees in the Near East is, as it is, one-fourth of the entire national expenditure of a country like the United Kingdom in peace time, some idea may be obtained of the cost which will be involved in meeting the needs of that vast army of destitution which at the present time is inoperative. Now this is, of course, very far from being an argument for pessimism. It is, however, an argument for a fuller recognition of the great fact that the "old order" is not passing; it is already passed; that the world will no more be able to return to pre-war conditions than the bear-stalk can return to its seed, that after the cost of the war will come the cost of reconstruction, and that whilst this is being met the great work of reviving values, in the truest sense of the word, is being done. What exactly the result will be, on one can precisely say, but toward the achievement of the best result the importance of facing facts cannot be overestimated.

Beef for Export Trade. Hon. T. A. Crerar, Minister of Agriculture, calls upon Canadian farmers to finish their beef animals for many light-weight animals have been slaughtered. The beef carcass, in order to be favorably considered, should weigh at least 500 pounds. His Labors. A young registrant, claiming exemption, was asked, "How many people are dependent on you?" He replied: "Two, sah. Paw, he depends on me to find waikin for mine, and me, she depends on me for to hunt wood choppin' for paw." Do Not Mind Heat. Orientals seem to be immune to the fierce heat of the fireroom in ocean steamships, and can endure for a great length of time temperatures that would speedily prostrate white men.
