The practical side of science is reflected in

A monthly publication of inestimable value to the student of every day scientific problems, the mechanic, the industrial expert, the manufacturer, the inventor—in fact, to every wide-awake person who hopes to better his condition by using his brains. The inventor, especially, will find in The Patent Record a guide, philosopher and friend. Nothing of importance escapes the vigilant eyes of its corps of expert editors. Everything is presented in clean, concise fashion, so that the busiest may take time to read and comprehend. The scientific and industrial progress of the age is accurately mirrored in the columns of The Patent Record, and it is the only publication in the country that prints the official news of the U. S. Patent Office and the latest developments in the field of invention without fear or favor.

Dragged to Death.

Sad Death of Jabez O. Bullis.—
Attended Frankville Fair
Got Intoxicated, and Was Dragged to Death on His Way Home.

What is characterized as a sad ending to a misspent life, occurred on Saturday morning opposite Mr. Borthwick's residence, a couple of miles south of Frankville, by which Jabez O. Bullis, a well-known resident of this section, met his death. It appears that deceased attended Frankville fair on Friday, and went back there from Plum Hollow on foot Saturday morning. Here he fell in with a couple of boon companions, John Churchill and Thos. Hollingsworth, of Plum Hollow, and the three men started for home in the one carriage. When going along through the Leebly Woods, Churchill and Hollingsworth were thrown or got out of the buggy, and Bullis fell out catching his foot in the gearing and was dragged about half a mile over the stone road.

When opposite the Borthwick farm, Mrs. Borthwick observed a horse and buggy out on the road without any driver, and saw what she supposed was a lap-rug hanging from the buggy. She ran out and stopped the horse and was horrified to see a man hanging by one foot to the gearing and the body dragging on the stones under the buggy. She ran down into the field to alarm her husband and the horse followed her into the yard and stopped at the watering trough. The men soon arrived and released the body from the carriage and found that it was Jabez O. Bullis, who was dead. Dr. Dixon was at once notified, and on examination found that Bullis' skull was cracked and he was otherwise badly bruised. The two companions were found lying at the side of the road dead drunk and asleep. When aroused they knew nothing of how the accident occurred. Mr. Bullis was removed to the residence of Geo. Tuckaberry, Plum Hollow, and the funeral took place on Monday forenoon to the Baptist church, service being conducted by Revs. Simmons and Sprague, and the body was interred in the Benedict cemetery near by.

The unfortunate man was about 53 years of age, and was a son of the late Jerry Bullis, and brother of our respected ex-Reeve Sheldon Y. Bullis, and was born near Glen Ball and has always resided in this locality. He was a kind of an all round mechanic. Kind and generous to a fault, his worst failing was an unquenchable desire for strong drink at certain periods, which he was unable to resist.

This sudden and sad end of a man in the prime of life, under such distressing circumstances, should be a lesson to his two companions such as they will never forget.

A TWO DAYS' CRUISE

ON THE LAH-NE-O-TAH.

On Thursday morning 19th inst. the Scribe of the Reporter and Marsh Ripley, of Elgin, left for Charleston, for a short outing at the lake on board the houseboat. The boat was reached about 11 a.m. and loosening her moorings the sail was set and a start made down the lake, the objective point being the shore at the foot of Blue Mountain. While the Scribe handled the wheel, the extempore mate and cook proceeded to inspect the larder and by the time Hanson's point was reached, he had a steaming hot dinner ready. After a stop of about an hour, sail was again hoisted and a run made across the "Big Waters" past Babcock rock, Flat island and through the passage between Silver and Wolfe Islands down into the eastern waters, and the boat tied up at "Dell's" rock for supper. Here they remained until nearly nine o'clock that evening when the wind freshening, the sail was again hoisted and a run made down by Grassy Point, Huckleberry Hollow, Painted Rock and away down to a little bay below Sunset Rocks at the foot of Blue Mountain. Here the boat was tied up for the night and the evening spent in trying to put an old fowling piece together with which to secure a brace or two of partridge on the hills to replenish the larder. The effort was unsuccessful and the thought of partridge stew for the morrow's dinner had to be abandoned. At daylight the fire was started and Marsh prepared one of his most savory dishes, knowing that it would be late in the afternoon before they returned from their exploring trip through the glens and over the rocks to the top of Blue Mountain. Taking a row boat they pulled down the lake a half mile where they found a trail that led from the shore of the lake to the settlements on sixth concession of Lansdowne. Following this for a mile or more they took a bee line for the top of Blue Mountain, keeping a weather eye open for signs of the mineral they had come to locate. Many stops were made on the way and with pick and hammer every peculiar looking rock was examined and many nooks and crannies on the side hills searched. After nearly five hours' hard tramping, the top of the mountain was reached and a grand panoramic view presented itself to the two men. Seated on a rock they could scan the horizon for miles. It was Marsh's first visit to this much talked of spot and although not of a very romantic disposition he was honest enough to say that the view he had that day from the top of Blue Mountain amply repaid him for all the weary steps he had made to get there. Looking away to the east the spires of Brackville could be seen with a glass and here and there a glimpse of the old St. Lawrence came into view and further on the village of Lansdowne. Away to the South the tin roofs of Gananoque shone brightly in the autumn sun and at the foot of the mountain lay scattered the comfortable dwellings of the farmers living along the fifth and sixth concessions. Turning to the west and north and lying almost at their feet the two men gazed enraptured on the shrub covered hills and dells of the islands and main land in and surrounding one of the most beautiful sheets of water to be found on the continent of America. The light frost of the preceding weeks had tinted the leaves with a beautiful golden hue and these thrown in contrast with the silver sheen of the water produced a variety of colors beautiful to behold. The men would fain have lingered there, basking in the sunshine for hours but a glance down over the rugged way they had marked out as their road back and knowing the sooner they reached the houseboat the sooner would a good, keen appetite be appeased. There were several ways of reaching the top of Blue Mountain by easy stages and over comparatively smooth footing but it was not the desire of the men on this occasion to take those paths but rather to grope their way down by new and unfrequented ways. On the way Marsh slipped, spraining his ankle, which gave him considerable pain, and the Scribe knocked a piece of flesh from his hand in an endeavor to save the axe he was carrying from coming in contact with a boulder.

A large porcupine was dispatched with the pick ax Marsh had with him and a large number of partridge were frightened from their cover as the men passed through the dells. It was near nightfall when the houseboat was reached and a hastily prepared dinner and supper combined was partaken of, and then the sail was again hoisted and a start made for another part of the lake. The boat was run as near the bay where the body of Dochstrater (who was murdered by Harter many years ago was found) as possible to give Marsh an opportunity of viewing the place he had heard much about in his younger days. A brisk wind coming up from the south the boat was headed through the half way island gap and run to Buckhorn Point where a halt was made for the much needed supper which Marsh had again prepared. Only a short halt was made here as the men were anxious to get to a good sheltered cove where they could tie up for the night. On past Frizzle, Seven Eer islands and Diamond point, to Hedgehog island where a splendid landing place was found. Here the lines were got out and a fine catch of bass and bullpouts was made and enough cleaned and stowed away for the following day. Plans were made for the morrow and at an early hour the men turned into their berths. It there is any particular thing that Marsh is proficient in it is the art of snoring. About every five minutes the Scribe would have to dig his elbows into the ribs of the snorter which would bring the snorts to a sudden standstill only to commence with redoubled force the next minute. The wind, which was in the south when the men retired, was found to have veered round to the west when the men arose at daylight, so the trip up through "Long Reach" towards Donaldson's bay had to be abandoned and the route by way of Election point and Baby island up along Kelsey's island taken instead.

The houseboat was tied up at Kelsey's point and the row boat got out and with salmon fishing tackle on board a start was made for "Tallow Rock," and Donaldson's Bay. After thoroughly searching the depths of Tallow Rock without success a stroll was taken up on to the hills in search of minerals, indications of which were found in several places. They went on down towards La Rose bay where they caught a seven pound salmon, part of which was prepared for the evening meal. Returning to the houseboat about five p.m. the sail was again hoisted and a lively run made to the boat's anchorage in Lah-ne-o-tah bay, where the boat was made fast to shore and the men turned home well pleased with their trip. This sketch is written more to show the ease with which a outing can be had on the houseboat and the number of places that can be visited in a short time, than for any special items of interest encountered during the trip.
