The Worst Thing About Sivvie Izashun

Says "Georgie's" Pa. "The man who first started this mooving bizness," paw sed one nite after he got home from not finding a house for us to live in, "was neerly as bad a henemy of the hewmin race as the one that got us in the habbut of wairing close. That the worst thing about sivyle izashun. It's expensive and makes a heap of bother. When ever people commence to get sivvle ized it's like when a baby cuts teath. The teath come in handy, all rite, but some times it hardly seems like they were worth all the trouble. "It's the same way with sivvle tzashun. I could tell you about lots of ways where it's a good thing to have around. But see what we haft to give up for it. If it wouldn't of been for sivvle izashun peeple wouldn't need to worry because the varnish mite nocked offen the piano or sum of the cut glass would get stepped on by man that has the nurve to hang around at nite waitin' for his pay after he's rooened ate or nine dollars' worth of stuff that you won at card parties.

"Why do peeple eat their meels offen boxes in the kitchen and sleep on bare floors that are full of tax? Sivvle izashun's to blame for it. The nobul red man don't never haft to neerly brake his back and get the skin all wore offen his nees nos spoil a conshunce that was nearly as good as new taken up carpets. No, when he wants to move, all he hast to do is to wait till dark and then jump the reservashun. If he has a squaw that's enny good she can carry the two youngest children with one hand and the fambly telluskope with the other.

"That's whare I don't blame the Innot wanting to get sivele ized. They've had a chance to see the white man mooving, and I gess they think they'd better stick to bein' savidges. They no a good thing when they've got to moove enny way? I'll tell you what. They haven't ever get out of the old savidge habbut yet, after all thare sivvle izatiun. It's poor old hewmun naitcher, that's what it is. God didn't bild a house with bay windows and burgler alarms and open plummin' and all the moddegn conveaneyunces for portch elimber. and all the moddern conveaneyunces for portch climbers and tell Adam and Eve that was whare they had to live. No, they just went campen around wharever they pleased, and if thay got tired livin' in one place they'd tie thare wedding presents in a handkerchief and go whare the train service was just and they could have more room. And that's the same old fealing people have in them to-day. They can't get it sivvle ized out of them. If it wouldn't be for that lots of peeple would live two or three years in the same place and be happy without hunt-in around after a worse one that cost more munny. You can always tell about how far a purson's got away from their munky ancestors by the way they want to moove. If 'hey don't moove often it shows they can trace their fambly away back, but if they hardly get settled before they want to moove again you couldn't get back of thare grand fawthers without going over into the heart of Afriky." "Well," maw says, "I don't know but you're right about that part of it." After paw got, the ashes of siggar wiped offen his vest where they fell in "Sumthing must be goin' to happen. That's neerly the first time you ever agreed with me." 'How could I help it," maw told him. when they are never a spring comes along without you want to moove."-Georgie, in Chicago Times-Herald.

How President Monroe Paid His Notes. Down in Chariottesville, Va., ene hears funny stories about the late and a plain granite shaft, which marks his tomb, is visible from the highway. Mr. Monroe was not a "gendeman" as that term is applied to Virginia. His. ancestry did not belong to the aristocracy, and although he was an educated man, a lawyer of recognized ability, a legislator and a politician of reputation, he never was admitted to the chosen chrcle of the "F. F. V.," and the general impression seems to be that he was not famous either in his manners or his morals. One of the stories relates to a lawyer who went over to Montpelier during the latter years of Mr. Monroe's life to arrange for the settlement of a number of Mr. Monroe's notes which had drifted into the hands of a Charlottesville bank. Most of them represented borrowed money, but several had been for property or merchandise purchased. The lawyer was a man of high social and professional standing, and Mr. Monroe appeared to be greatly pleased at his visit. They spent the morning upon the mazza, smoking and chatting over the affairs of the nation, and after a hospitable dinner took a walk about the place. As they returned to the mansion the lawyer remarked in an apologetical manner that he must not forget his duty in the abundance of his enjoyment, and handed Mr. Monroe a statement of the several notes, the interest due, the dates of maturity, etc. He made a polite speech in explanation, and said that his client, the bank which held the paper, hoped that Mr. Monroe would be able to give some satisfac-"I'll give you satisfaction right here and now," exclaimed the indignant expresident. "You infernal scoundred! You invade my home and eat my dinners and drink my wine with a lot of due bills in your pocket," and, seizing a riding whip which hung from the rack in the hall, he began to lay it over the shoulders and head of the astonished attorney .- Chicago Record.

"Well, men who camp out, you know, have a fire. I am going to pretend I'm camping out and I'm going to spend the night by the parlor fire."

"That's a good idea."
"No. I think I'll be a sentinel and walk up and down before the fire, with my gun over my shoulder."
"But a sentinel must not go to sleep. He must be on the watch all the time and say-

"I know! 'Who goes there?" night? "I think I shall." answered Harry,

It had long been Harry's wish to sit up all night, and he could not help thinking his mamma very unkind never to let him. He teased so much that finally mamma said-"Well, Harry, you may." At about eight o'clock Harry, who was usually in bed and asleep at that time, took his stand by the fire. His toy gun over his shoulder, and on his head he wore his soldier cap. Up and down he walked before the fire, and at Whenever he first it was great fun. heard a sound, he would call, "Who goes there?" And it would be papa coming to look for a book, or mamma Once, when he called very loud, "Who goes there?" what do you think hap-pened? The little white kitten ran into the room! Up and down, up and down went Harry. Heavier and heav-ier grew the gun. Harder and harder was it to keep to the straight line in the carpet. Harry looked at the easy chair and the sofa, but proudly he shook his head. "I've always wanted to sit up all night, and I'm going to snow mamma how much I want to!

THE BIGGEST PLOUGH. THE BIGGEST PLOUGH.

The ordinary farmer would hardly recognize as a plough a giant machine now in use in Kern County, Cal. This is without doubt the biggest plough in the world. It cuts a furrow four feet wide, and was originally built for the purpose of making irrigation canals. Even for this huge undertaking it was found too unwieldy. To start the plough in motion eighty teams of oxen are required. So the farmers of Kern County manage to do their work without the aid of the prize plough and keep it on view merely to show what Western anterprise can accomplish.

A Real Man With the Hoe. "Grumply used to think that the finest thing in the world was to dress like a tramp, neglect to shave, and dig around on a farm that he owns not far from the city," said Mr. Smith with a rem niscent grin. "He was out there one day last summer on his vacation, and he invited me to pay him a visit. I accepted, and mardly arrived when I was asked to put on a pair of overalls and help him hoe a field of cabbage that was near the house. I declined with thanks, but told him not to let me interfere with his labor. So I seized a hoe and started in, where I selected a shady spot where I could smoke and watch him swing his hoe. He had only been at work a few minutes when a couple of women drove along the road and stopped where he was at
