LOVE AND I. Love and I were friends of old :-

I was then a true believer In the tales for frolic told By this little gay deceiver. Easy 'tis to trace the birth Of the bond that grew between I was but a child of earth,

Love could call his mother Venus. Years and years have gathered fast-Life has lost her summer glory, Each deception of the past

Seems a nigh-forgotten story. Still, in dreams of what is o'er Mem'ry takes a retribution-Though the partnership of yore Long has been in dissolution.

Recipe for an Appetite.

My lad, who sits at breakfast With forehead in a frown, Because the chop is underdone And the fritter overbrown.

Just leave your dainty mincing,

And take to mend your fare, A slice of golden sunshine, And a cup of morning air. And when you have eat and drunken, If you want a little fun,

Throw off your jacket of broadcloth And take an up-hill run. And what with one and the other, You will be so strong and gay, That work will be only a plea

Through all the rest of the day. And when it is time for supper, Your bread and milk will be As sweet as a comb of honey Will you try my recipe?

A SUDDEN CURE. A meloncholy woman lay . In sickness on her bed. And, in a faint and broken voice,

To her sad husband said: "Dear David, when my earthly form Has turned to lifeless clay, O wait an' weep a little while,

Nor throw yourself away, "I know a woman, kind an' true, On whom you may depend. Oh! marry Aramilla Jones—

She is my dearest friend." "Yes, Hannah, I have wanted long, To speak o' this before : For Aramilla Jones an' I

Have talked the matter o'er' "Then you an' Aramilla Jones Have been too smart and sly I tell you, David Wilkinson,

I'm not a-goin' to die;" Her dark eyes flashed; her strength r She left her bed of pain; A week had scarcely passed away When she was well again.

Selert Story.

"I think if two of you bring it here, openly and in daylight, no one will suspect anything," he said, reassuringly, and I will try to discover the owners."

The two drew a lorg breath of relief, as they arose to go, but Ray paused with lish and upon the door, and said when Monday came, bringing its school duties, and he could be with the others again—though indeed they had not much comfort to give him, and seemed ill at ease themselves. They looked interrogation points at each other, and were answered by a despondent shake of the head.

The two drew a lorg breath of relief, as they arose to go, but Ray paused with his hand upon the door, and said hesitatingly, "We forgot to ask how much you will charge, sir. I don't know how we can pray unless you will wait for us to earn it some way, and maybe you wouldn't like to do that?"

I must have my fee, certninly," said the squire. "But if you don't mind working for it, and are all willing to pile wood for me next Saturday afternoon,

Down the street, where swung a dirty sign that had once been blue and gold the two boys halted for an instant, then, with beating hearts ascended the stairs to an office that held a good deal of dust, a great many books, and a general air of learning. Fortunately, the gentleman they wished to see was alone. He looke up from his papers and over his spe and said briskly.—
"We'l, boys, ?"

"We wanted to know," proceeded Ray, sitting uncomfortably on the edge of his chair," whether if anybody did anything that was against the law, but did it just in fun, and didn't mean to, really, if—it would be just the same ?'

Once, during the morning, there was a heavy rap at the school-room door, and five of the pupils started and turned a shade paler at the sound. They scanned the teacher's face closely on his return, but could read nothing unusual in its expression.

"I tell you it's very nice to talk about thold outlaws' and merry men,' and all that, but if Bobin Hood and his band felt anything the way we do, there wasn't much fun in such a life, that's all," said Charlie, when they were alone together for a few minutes.

At recess Ray searched the long line of hooks where the girls hung their wrappings, and was so thorough in his examination that a school-mate called out curiously:

"Hello, Ray! Don't think your cap is among the girls' things, do you? Whyyou've got it on your head, old fellow! What are you looking for?"

Ray laughed uneasily in answer, but he had assured himself that the hard assured himself that the himself t
