Lure of the Labrador.

In the Geographical Journal for April, Dr. W. T. Grenfell, sets forth according to the Review of Reviews, bright prospects for the Labrador.

"It can and will carry, in the days to come, a population as easily as Norway does to-day."

"When the distribution of plants and animals that are of service to man is no longer purely fortuitous, when man spends time and energy to find and cultivate vegetables and animals suitable to environments, Labrador will prove to be a country not merely of value to the Empire of which it may be a part, but also to the human race, as an enormous adjunct to the already sufficiently diminished food-producing area of the globe. For if ever a race shall rise to people her glorious fjords and miles, and to wrest her undoubted wealth from her forests and mines, like all northern countries she will evolve a people endowed with those sterling physical qualities that characterized the Vikings of old, and with that resourcefulness and maritime genius which have ever been, and still are, among the most highly-prized heritages of the English people."

Not only will the Labrador be increasingly attractive to the tourist and health seeker, but its economic value will be better appreciated. At the mouth of the Hamilton River, Dr. Grenfell has seen growing fields of oats and barley that made him almost believe he was at home in England. Labrador wood is stringy and suitable for pulp. There is an extraordinary water power available. The wild berry crops cannot be excelled. Large seams of sulphide of iron have been seen. Prospectors have been working at alluvial gold between Sandwich and Eskimo Bays. There are plenty of harbors for small vessels, and lastly he calculates that the Labrador could easily support three million reindeer and be a meat supply for the world.

STRICKEN WITH DIPHTHERIA.—A case of diphtheria was reported to-day from Springdale Street. A girl aged 15 is ill of it and was taken to Hospital.

The police authorities seem increasingly nervous but the situation, especially in regard to the second day when the King drives through London. Precautions are always taken on these occasions but the police have never been so careful as they are this time. During the past week, detectives have been visiting the buildings along the route, questioning into the names of the occupants, and the prospective occupants. It is the first time such precautions have been taken to safeguard English Royalty at home.

Barque Guadalhorce Condemned

The Carbonear seamen who shipped here and went to Malaga on the Spanish barque Guadalhorce, returned by the Carthagenian. The barque from this port had some very bad weather, and but for the Newfoundlanders would not have reached her destination. The Spaniards could not be got to work here as seamen should, and on arrival we learn she was surveyed and afterwards condemned. While here she received repairs costing several thousands of dollars and was given a complete fit out of new sails, but most of these were blown away again on the way over.
