The Child of the Long Ago.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"It makes my heart ache sometimes when I think how few pleasures I had in my childhood," a woman said to me the other day. "I often wish I could get at that little girl of the long ago and give her a few of the pleasures some of the children round me have so many of and appreciate so little."

That is perfectly natural and justifiable sentiment and one which I fancy many of us experience when we see the pampered children of to-day's upper and middle classes.

But isn't it strange that some of us don't go a step farther than just feeling, and, since we can't get hold of the little girls and boys of the long ago, put others like them in their places and give them happiness?

Another Way to Settle The Score.

There are plenty of children in the world to-day to whom such pleasures as the circus or the menagerie, expensive toys and pleasure trips are as rare as they were to most children in the simpler days. They may not be among the children of our intimate friends, but they are all about us and are not hard to find if we try. And it seems somehow as if the little, wistful faces that haunt our memory would brighten if they saw these other children made happy.

And yet how seldom it occurs to anyone to settle the score in that way.

One of the biggest lessons in life, it seems to me, is to be taught kindness and sympathy for the hard experiences of others by our own troubles and deprivations.

What is the Use of Sorrow If We Don't Learn?

Think how useless and meaningless suffering and sorrow and deprivation are if they don't teach us to understand and sympathize.

And yet there are people who can pass through them without having their sympathies broadened or their understanding deepened.

"Our sympathy is never very deep unless founded on our own feelings," someone has said. "We pity, but do not enter into the grief we have never felt."

That, of course, is inevitable for the average person, without a spiritual imagination, but to be unable to enter into the griefs we have once experienced merely because that time is past is quite another thing.

Spiritual Defectives.

We call the child who forgets one lesson as fast as he learns the next a defective. Aren't people who forget one lesson in sympathy as soon as they learn the next spiritually defective?

I know a woman who is absorbed and devoted mother of four children. Tell her of any sorrow connected with motherhood and she is all sympathy. Tell her of any other trouble, even those of which her own experience should have taught her something, and she will probably say, "Isn't that too bad? Did I tell you what Jane said yesterday?" or "Listen, is that the baby?"

Painful experience is the rough, bitter shell; sympathy is the sweet kernel. Are we not foolish when we refuse the sweet after we have been forced to accept the bitter?

At the City Hall.

The Chairman, Messrs. Harris, Ayre, McNamara, Bradshaw, Mulhally, McGrath, Withers and Morris attended last night's meeting of the Civic Commission.

J. R. Gillis, Crobie Hotel, wrote saying that he would like to demonstrate the dust-faying qualities of a tar oil for which he is agent. The Engineer will consult with Mr. Gillis on the matter.

Sarah Pope was given permission to repair roof of store on Waldegrave Street.

John Deer complained of an offensive pool on the Cove Road. The Sanitary Supervisor will inquire into the matter.

The Engineer reported that James Hardy had erected a stable at the rear of dwelling on Coronation St. The Solicitor will apply the law forthwith, and also in cases of Casey and Walsh who put up erections without the sanction of the Board.

Plans of new dwelling for A. Herler, Forest Road, were approved.

Charles Morrissey was given permission to make repairs to house 86 Lime Street.

The Cab Stand Committee reported on their interview with a delegation from the Cabmen's Union. The committee will sit again and make a final report at next meeting.

On the recommendation of the Special Committee, C. Fewer was given permission to repair house at the corner of Lime and Central Sts. With the adoption of reports from the various departments and the passing of pay rolls, the meeting adjourned at 10 p.m.
