

"Shoes That Fit Best Wear The Longest."

It is a fact. If a shoe hurts, the foot flinches and some other part of the shoe suffers.

DOROTHY DODD SHOES, fitted as we fit them, will wear as long as any reasonable person may expect; and they will always look as they did the first day you put them on.

A Dangerous Fear.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Nobody likes or admires the sort of people who are always trying to do or say things which will make them conspicuous. In fact, so strong is the antagonism aroused by this type of person that I think I express myself with a great many people in a rush to the other extreme. That is, in their fear of being conspicuous, they hold back from doing simple and natural things. Here is an example of that tendency which I caught myself in the other day.

How I Missed An Honour.

A big flag was being hung out across the street in front of our house in celebration of a certain local gain. The flag was hung from a rope which crossed from one tree to another. During the process of making fast, the rope unexpectedly sagged and the flag threatened to touch the ground. I happened to be the secret to the flag and my first instinct was to rush forward and hold it up. Ten years ago, I would have done that without a second's hesitation, but in the past ten years inhibitions have been growing upon me. I did not want to make myself conspicuous in the crowd that had gathered to witness the flag raising. I hesitated and in that second, someone pushed past me and seized the flag. And over myself I felt a hot wave of shame go. Just on account of that fool fear of being conspicuous I had let another do the act of homage to our flag which I should have loved dearly to have had the honor of doing. One needs sometimes to be suspicious of impulses, but one also needs to be suspicious of the inhibitions which would throttle all impulses.

When the Fear of Being Conspicuous Is the Fear of Living.

To be careful not to do things just for the sake of making oneself conspicuous is one thing. To be afraid to do thoroughly commendable things just because one does not want to appear conspicuous is quite another. This eternal fear of being conspicuous or ridiculous is part of that fear of living that keeps a life poor and dull.

People Have Something More Important to Think of.

Moreover, fear of being conspicuous ous is often a kind of vanity, an enlargement of the ego that makes one feel that the thoughts of the beholder will concentrate one oneself rather than on the act one is doing. People do not bother to think half so much about your doings as you imagine. You see they have something ten times as important to think about—their own affairs.

Milady's Boudoir.

BEAUTIFUL EYES REQUIRE CARE. Beautiful, clear eyes can redeem from plainness the face which lacks every other feature of beauty. Take a hand glass and look yourself straight in the eyes. Are the pupils black and shining, the iris of a clear color and the surrounding frame of a pure blue-white? If not there is something wrong and the eyes require immediate attention.

The main essential to eye beauty is health. When the eyes lose their lustre and the whites become inflamed or of a yellow cast the health needs improving, and a physician should be consulted at once. It is to be remembered that the eyes are most delicately constructed and must be treated with the greatest care. Eye strain robs them of their brilliancy, so you must not bend for hours over fine needlework, stitching away without a thought of the tired eyes. Nor must you read newspapers or books when you are travelling. You may find it necessary to protect your eyes from the glaring sunshine, particularly if you spend your vacation at the sea shore. Wear smoked glasses or carry a green shade when you are exposed to the sunlight, and in this manner keep the eyes from burning and becoming inflamed.

THE LITTLE OLD RED SCHOOL HOUSE.

The little old red school house is the cradle of our dreams. The little old red school house that we see from every train. Standing bravely by the roadways, by the hills and by the streams. Is the birthplace of the splendors and the joys we shall attain.

There the voice of Freedom whispers mightily secrets to our youth. There the seeds of faith are planted in the brave and sturdy hearts.

There to-morrow's men and women, by the shining light of truth, learn the majesty of service and the joy which it imparts.

The little old red school house, with the teacher at the door, is the bulwark of our glory and the guardian of our pride. From the feet of grim invaders it shall long protect our shore, and no vicious reign of terror in its presence can abide.

There all tyrants meet their downfall, there the force of might is stayed.

There the hand of hate is withered, and the blows of evil vain.

In the little old red school house Freedom's children, unafraid, learn the paths which lead to glory and the goals they shall attain.

A Duke Tracks a Criminal.

On March 19th, 1789, three men were arrested for murder on board a Portuguese vessel in the Thames, their capture being due to the efforts of no less a person than the Duke of Cumberland, who had tracked them like any modern Sherlock Holmes. The men were Antonio Murino, a Venetian; Jacin Pharaa, a Genoese; and Stephen Apologie, a Russian; and they, along with a shipmate called Joseph, had been paid off some days previously from the ship Crown Prince, from Sardinia, at Southampton. The four had started to walk to London, and no notice was taken of their movements until Monday, 15th, when a man, driving his cows into a field near Belfont, discovered in a ditch, hidden under brambles, the body of a man, badly mutilated. At the same time the Duke of Cumberland chanced to be hunting in the locality, and on the fender drawing his attention to the body, he set his dogs to track the scent backwards from the ditch, with the result that they led to the London road, near Belfont, where it was discovered that four men had been shaved, and had slept at the "Black Lion," the deceased, it was found, being the man who had paid for the others. Thereupon the Duke followed up the clue, and succeeded in unearthing a certain Frederico Solara, a Genoese, who also had been on board the Crown Prince, and who had come up by the stage to London. This man had a suspicion of the others, and after their arrest, identified a relic, mounted in silver, found in their possession, as one belonging to the murdered man. On the strength of this evidence, procured by the Duke, the other three were tried, convicted, and executed at Newgate shortly afterwards. They confessed their crime, and Murino acknowledged himself to be the son of a Venetian nobleman.

The Submarine Murders.

It is asserted in London that the Peace Conference Commission which is making an inquiry concerning the responsibility and guilt of individuals has evidence enough to convict twenty U-boat commanders of murder. Nearly all of these are now in Germany. The records of seven are said to call for special condemnation. In the commission's report there may be a recommendation that these commanders be surrendered for trial by a new international court. Their crimes have not been forgotten. Nearly 4,000 merchant ships were destroyed during the war, and about 1,400 of them were owned in neutral countries. Norway alone lost $31. More than 17,000 sailors gave up their lives. The British Seamen's Union mourns the deaths of 15,000. Many of these men were murdered by submarine gunners while they were in lifeboats or on rafts. Sometimes the submarine moved around a raft, and German officers jeered at the misery of their victims while shrapnel tortured or killed them. Even Dutch fishermen were slaughtered in this way after their schooners had been sunk. Because of these crimes the British Seamen's Union has boycotted Germany for seven years, and Norway's union has voted that it will help Germany in no way until $4,000,000 has been paid to the relatives of 1,120 members lost with the 831 sunken ships. Premier Lloyd George said some weeks ago that the English jurists whose opinion the British Government had sought "reported strongly in favor of the punishment of those 'guilty of murder on the high seas.'"

No hearties pirate in past centuries was guilty of greater or more wanton cruelty than is shown in the record of their offences. It could not have been difficult for the commission to get evidence. The testimony of fortunate survivors, neutrals as well as belligerents, has repeatedly shocked the world, the "Central Powers" excepted. There would be more of it if crews of ships "sunk without trace" could be brought to life. It may be that with twenty commanders of submarines will be associated, as another defendant, their superior officer. Admiral Von Tirpitz, now seeking rest in a Swiss cottage.—N. Y. Times.

Household Notes.

With roast meat parsnip balls are delicious. Shallow tarts can be baked in gem pans. Never spray fruit trees while blossoming. Every garden requires bonemeal to enrich it. Flavor pork pie with lemon, sage and cinnamon. Leftover fruit syrups may be added to apple pie. Celeriac is indispensable in flavoring some soups. In making pastry have everything as cold as possible. Wash raisins in hot water before using them for cakes. Ham and mutton fat should be saved for soap grease. The drier cheese is the better if you wish to use it grated. Save all rich brown drippings or stock for soups or gravies. Steam parsnips instead of boiling. It retains their flavor. Carrots should be sown as soon as the garden can be worked. Parsnips with cream can be served with toast at breakfast. If you have no watering pot with a spout use an old tea kettle. Root crops in winter storage should be cool and rather moist. Blue-and-white is too cold a color scheme for a north or east room. If worked while moist, most fruit stains are removable with cold water. Sow leeks and onions together and leave the leeks for an autumn crop. French bread contains no ingredients save water, salt, flour and yeast. Tomato plants produce more when the ends of their branches are nipped off. One part turpentine to three parts linseed oil makes a good furniture polish. The importance of the potato as a staple article of diet increases constantly. Pumpkin squashes and sweet potatoes must be in warm winter storage. Every bit of table linen should be saved and cut up for dollies when possible.

MARCH.

WALT MASON

Windy March is now on deck; Winter gets it in the neck, and we hear him say, "By heck, it is time to loop the loops;" gentle Spring is on the way; there are balmy winds today, and the hens begin to lay in their richly furnished coops. March will try us for a spell; she will rant and she will yell, raising forty kinds of Hail Columbia, but it's all an empty bluff; Winter has the final fling ere the birds begin to sing, and we welcome gentle Spring; oh, the Springtime is the stuff! March may dish up snow and sleet, fill with slush the village streets, and annoy rheumatic feet, but no dead game sport will sigh; for the sun will follow fast on the coat tails of the blast; March's tantrums will be past in the twinkling of an eye. Soon the bumble bee and ant on the lawn will gallivant, and the pelican will chant like a bulbul, to its mate; soon the aardvark and the owl and the common barnyard fowl will sit up at night and howl, for old Winter pulls his freight. Oh, the rapture and the bliss when the blizzards cease to hiss, and the sunbeams come and kiss dewy lilies and the rose! March's winds may rant and shout, but they cannot bluff us out, for we know, beyond a doubt, they are Winter's dying throes.
