 HIS REPENTANCE.

"I wish you had told me the truth at the time, Mark. You suffered me to believe that the chloroform was given by Dr.
 Davenal."
 "And what difference did it make to you which of us gave it?" was Mark Cray's reply, not an unnatural one. "You may guess that it was a thing I did not care to speak of. So I told you it was given by the chloroform, coincidentally, in accordance with ordinary practice and our best judgment, nobody could say a word, but if it had been disclosed that I gave it by myself, on my own responsibility, I should have had the whole town carping at me." Oswald had nothing further to say. He did not tell the bitter truth—that this miserable misapprehension had wrecked his hopes of happiness, had been making an ice-block of his heart in the intervening years.
 Not only in the dining-parlor of Miss Davenal's house was there a conference being held at that hour, but also in the drawing-room above, and for the all-absorbing nature of his own thoughts, Oswald Cray had not failed to hear the words, Captain Davenal said. And Mr. Neal was slipping out of all accusations as smoothly as an eel.

The group was noticeable. Miss Davenal sat in a chair, upright and angry, only partially understanding the cause of the commotion; Captain Davenal standing, open and impetuous, talking very fast; Neal full of spite and self-possession, all his wit in all play; and Sara sitting apart in silence, her cheek bent upon her hand. Captain Davenal charged and fired with his usual general and particular. Neal had his plausible answer ready to meet it all.
 The interview was drawing to an end, and the satisfaction had been derived from it. Poor Miss Davenal's ears were in a mazed condition; desks, letters, inventions to Sara touching a quiver, inventions to a hundred other charges, jumbling together upon nothing being clear.
 Neal denied everything.
 "Oswald told me," said the young woman, "my wife," cried Captain Davenal, indignantly.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Neal, respectfully. "I said I felt quite sure that there must be some mistake. Miss Sara perhaps will remember that such was my opinion."
 "At any rate you said the young woman made the charge," persisted Captain Davenal, irritated at the assured coolness.
 "I did, sir, I understood the young woman to make the charge," persisted Captain Davenal.

Neal shrugged his shoulders in submissive acquiescence, meant for me? I am the personification of a young man's purpose to say so now, sir. I fear she is not very strict in her adherence to the truth; but she certainly did make it at the time.
 However, sir, I am quite willing to take the blame upon myself, to allow that I misunderstood her.

"Why, you have not the face to tell me that you have gone on believing it?" "Oh, dear no, sir. I was very soon afterwards convinced that the thing was a mistake altogether."
 "And pray why had you not the honesty to say so to Miss Sara Davenal?"

"I'm sure I should have been happy to say so, sir, had I possessed the least idea that it would have been welcome. But, after the first blush, the matter appeared to be so very absurd, that I never supposed Miss Sara would give it a second thought. If my silence has caused any uneasiness, I can only say how very sorry I am. I hopelessly tried Miss Bettina. "And pray, Neal, how came it, if you had anything of the sort to say, that you did not say it to me? I am the proper person to hear those things; a young man is not."

Neal advanced a step to his mistress and spoke in his low clear tone. "It was not my intention to speak Miss Sara at all, ma'am, or to you either; I should not have thought of doing such a thing. But I could not help myself when Miss Sara questioned me upon the point."

All that was a fine young fellow, and Miss Davenal nodded her head in approval.
 But her nephew, the captain, got in a passion, and insisted that Neal should be discharged there and then.

Neal was quite ready to go, he said.
 "Very courteous, if his mistress saw fit to afflict upon him so severe a step. He was unconscious of having done anything to particularize his offense.

"He is a villain, aunt," broke forth the captain intemperately, before Miss Bettina could interpose. "I believe he has been one ever since my father took him into the house. He has opened letters, and unlocked desks, and altogether played the part of a thief. He shall go."

Neal interrupted, humbly begging the captain's pardon. He could not truthfully assure his mistress that he had done nothing of the sort; he had never opened a letter in the house, except his own; had never touched a desk but to dust it. If Captain Davenal could mention any one distinct charge, he should be glad, as it would allow him the opportunity of refutation. No.
 His conscience acquitted him. He should quit the house—if he did have to quit it—with a clear conscience, and he thought his mistress would acknowledge that he did so.
 In the one little point concerning Mrs.
 Wentworth, he might have been in error; first, in too readily giving ear to what she said; next, in not having again spoken to Miss Sara to set the doubt at rest in her mind. They were mistakes, certainly, and he deeply regretted them.

"Neal," said the captain, too hot-headed to maintain his dignity, "I'd a hundred times over rather be an open villain than a sneak. Why, you know you have been nothing but a spy from the very moment you entered the house. Aunt Bettina listen! Before the regiment went away, I got into a little trouble, upon which I found it necessary to consult my father, and I went—"

"A little what?" asked Miss Bettina.
 "A little difficulty."
 "Oh, sir, yes," said Miss Bettina. "You were always getting into it."
 "Not such as that," thought the captain.
 "Well, I had to go down to Halloway's, he continued, as he best to tell her, you did not care that any of you should know it, and I got down one night unexpectedly by my father. I was with him in his study for some time, and went back so as to be at duty the next morning. Would you believe, pointing his finger at Neal, "that you honest fellow was a spy upon the lady's words?"

Mr. Neal was a little taken by surprise, and Sara looked up astonished. But the man was not out to lose his impassibility.
 "He was at the window, looking and listening; not I believe that he could see and hear very much. And he afterwards went abroad and told of the interview; told that his master had a secret visitor at night. You little thought, Mr. Neal, that the visitor was myself, or that I should ever bring it home to you."

Neal, all unconscious innocence, gazed straight forward into Captain Davenal's face. "I have not the least idea what it is that you are speaking of, sir. My recollection does not serve me upon the point."
 "Oh, yes, it does," said Captain Davenal.
 "A subtle nature such as yours cannot forget so easily. Happily he to whom you carried the tale of the evening was a trustworthy man; he kept his own counsel, and told you Dr. Davenal's visitors were no uninitiated, having as many strong men as can get about her as if they were so many babies. She has appeared before the crowned heads of Europe, and has been given many jewels. She will speak with winter with her mother in this city, and will return to Europe next April."

Little Dick—Don't in't going to give me any more of that kind of talk, Mother—Did she say she would? Little Dick—Yes, she said she would. I just the way sister Clara says "Don't" when some fellow is going to kiss her.

 Untold misery—What a Well-Known Commercial Traveler Suffered, and How He Was Cured.—Gentlemen,— About five years ago I began to be troubled with dyspepsia, and for two years suffered untold misery, from this terrible complaint.
 I was at that time traveling for Messrs.
 Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but all to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine, and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured; and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint, I heartily recommend Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of dyspepsia. (Signed.) T. S. McINTYRE.

CIVIL WAR IN BRAZIL.

The Government Troops Defeated by the Rebels.

MONTÉ VIDEO, Sept. 13.—The revolting navy at Rio again attempted to land, but were repulsed with considerable loss. In the Province of Tocantins, the Government forces had a battle yesterday in the main streets of Cordova. After a desperate fight the Revolutionists won the victory and captured the garrison of the Government troops. It is expected that the revolutionists will receive a large consignment of munitions of war, and it is believed that a decisive battle will be fought. Federal troops have left the capital for Cordova.

PROLONG THE YEARS OF THE AGED!

Father and Mother Can Be Made Happy!

The aged can be made happy, healthy and contented, and their lives greatly extended, if they receive what they most need in their declining years. This is accomplished by using their Father's Celery Compound two or three times a day.

This magnificent remedy keeps up the nerve power, corrects digestion, clears the brain and produces sound and natural sleep. Once these results are secured, the aged man and woman goes on from day to day in perfect health, and become a source of joy to all around them.

Help the old people give them more care and attention; procure for them Father's Celery Compound if they are complaining.
 Remember, the old folk once were your protectors and guardians; they shared your joys and sorrows, and their pains and distresses. Do something for them now before the dark grave is reached.
 Make their last days bright and joyous.
 This is surely and effectually done by Father's Celery Compound.

 pounds, but possesses a strange power that She has no extraordinary strength in handling "raw weight," but her power unlimited, having as many strong men as
