

"GEORGINA'S" REASONS.

A NEW AND FASCINATING CONTINUED STORY.

By HENRY JAMES.

Kate Theory asked, turning away her face from her sister. It was important that Mildred should not see how little the expression of that charming countenance corresponded with the inquiry. The precaution was useless, however, for in a moment Mildred said, with the delicately draped couch, who she sat at the open window, "Kate Theory, don't be affected."

"Perhaps it's for you he comes. I don't see why he should; you are far more attractive than I, and you have a great deal more to say. How can he help seeing you are the cleverest of the clever? You can talk to him of every thing; of the dates of the different eruptions, of the statues and bronzes in the Museum, which you have never seen—poor darling—but which you know more about than he does, than any one does. What was it you began on last time? O, yes, you poured forth floods about Magna Græcia. And then—and then—when you were with Mildred, she said she would do as you said; she felt it wouldn't do to speak the words that had risen to her lips. That her sister was as beautiful as a saint, and as delicate and refined as an angel—she had been on the point of saying something of that sort. But Mildred's beauty and delicacy were the fairness of mortal disease, and to praise her for her refinement was simply to intimate that she had the tenuity of a consumptive. So, after she had checked herself, the younger girl—the younger only by a year or two—simply kissed her tenderly, and settled the knot of the lace handkerchief that was tied over her head. Mildred knew what she had been going to say—knew why she had stopped. Mildred knew everything, without ever leaving her room, or leaving, at least, that she had made so pretty by simply lying there at the window that had the view of the bay and of Vesuvius. Mildred knew what to arrange and how to rearrange everything. Since it began to be plain that Mildred must spend her small remnant of years altogether in warm climates, however hot the two sisters had been cast in the ungarished hostels of southern Europe. Their little sitting-room was sure to be very ugly, and Mildred was never happy till it was rearranged. Her sister liked to work, as a matter of course, the first day, and changed the place of all the tables, sofas, chairs, and every combination had been tried, and the invalid thought at last that there was a little of it.

Kate Theory had a taste of her own, and her ideas were not always the same as her sister's; but she did whatever Mildred liked, and if the poor girl had told her to put the lamp on the table, she would have obeyed without a murmur. Her own ideas, her personal taste, had been followed, however, as she would have obeyed without a murmur. Her own ideas, her personal taste, had been followed, however, as she would have obeyed without a murmur. Her own ideas, her personal taste, had been followed, however, as she would have obeyed without a murmur.

only thing he would care for now. He was quiet, gentle, clever, humorous, and very kind in his manner; but if any one save Mildred had said to her that if it came three times a week to Postilippo, it was for anything but to pass his time (he had told them he didn't know another soul in Naples), she would have felt that this was simply the kind of thing—usually so idiotic—that people always thought it necessary to say. It was very easy for him to come; he had the big ship's boat, with nothing else to do; and what could be more delightful than to be rowed across the bay under a bright evening, by four brown sailors with Louisiana in blue letters on their immaculate white shirts, and in gilt letters on their fluttering hats—ribbons? The boat came to the steps of the garden of the penzion, where the orange trees hung over and made vague yellow balls shine back out of the water. Kate Theory knew about that, for Capt. Benyon had persuaded her to take a turn in the boat, and if they had only had another lady to go with them, he could have conveyed her to the ship, and she would have been in the city in half an hour. It looked beautiful, just a little way off, with the American flag hanging loose in the Italian air. They would have loved to be waiting long after they thought he had let a thing pass—said a good deal about the pleasure it would give him, of course everything would give pleasure to a man who was so bored. He was keeping the Louisiana at Naples, week after week, simply because it was the commodore's orders. There was no work to be done there, and his time was on his hands, but of course the commodore, who had gone to Constantinople with the two other ships, had to be obeyed to the letter, however mysterious his motives. It made no difference that he was a fanatic, that he was a man of letters, that he was a man of letters, that he was a man of letters.

The day I speak of, to change the subject, she called her sister's attention to the extraordinary sharpness of a jagged cloud shadow on the tilted slope of Vesuvius; but Mildred remarked in answer only that she wished her sister would marry the captain. It was in this familiar way that constant meditation led Miss Theory to speak of him; it shows how constantly she thought of him, for in general, no one was more scrupulous than she, and the falling of her head had not caused her to relax any form that it was possible to keep up. There was a kind of slim greenness even in the way she lay on her sofa; and she always received the doctor as if he were calling for the first time.

"I had better wait till he asks me," Kate Theory said. "Dear Milly, if I were to do some of the things you wish me to do I should think you very much."

"I wish he would marry you, then. You know there is very little time if I wish to see it."

"You will never see me, Mildred. I don't see why you should take it for granted that I would accept him."

were under 15 years of age and 12 per cent. were 35 years old and upward. Accompanying these statistics we have another report showing that the average marriage rate in Ireland during the decade has been much under the marriage rate in other countries. The marriage rate last year in the average of the decade. The explanation is found by the regular general in the emigration, which takes place among persons of marriageable age.

—W. W. McLellan, N.Y. N. S. writer: "I was afflicted with rheumatism and had given up all hopes of a cure. My chance I saw Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil recommended. I immediately sent (fifty cents) and purchased four bottles, and with only two applications I was able to get around, and although I have not used one bottle I am nearly well. The other three bottles I gave around to my neighbors, and I have had so many calls for more that I feel bound to relieve the afflicted by writing to you for a supply."

Simon Desau, an importer of diamonds, recently purchased in England a large diamond, weighing seventy-eight carats, in the shape of a heart, and set in a ring. He intended to give it to his daughter, D. S. Desau, an enthusiastic advocate of Governor Cleveland, persuaded him to wait until after the election, and to Cleveland should be elected, to call the diamond the "Cleveland Gem." Mr. Desau, however, died before the election, and his wife about fifty carats, and he worth $30,000.

—Mrs. George Simpson, Toronto, says: "I have suffered from rheumatism for several years, and was unable to get relief from treatment of any kind until I was recommended to try Holloway's Corn Cure. After applying it for a few days I was enabled to remove the corn, and without pain whatever, and so inconvincible in using it, I can heartily recommend it to all suffering from corns."

The Mount Olivet cemetery at East New York will be ready in February. Six bodies are already awaiting its completion for interment.
