The average annual cost in Boston for the past soven years has been (a) In primary schools, 23c per pupil. (b) In grammar schools, 23c per pupil. (c) In grammar schools, 23c per pupil.

The primary schools in Boston contain all pupils during the first four years of their school life, and slow pupils for a longer first longer school life, and slow pupils of the school life, and slow pupils of the school life, and slow pupils in the Boston basis at 17,482 pupils at 23c each, $4020,36, and 7225 pupils at $1.12 each $5002, making the total estimated cost on the Boston basis for 1892, $12,112,86. This places 2345 senior third book pupils in the Grammar School class.

With this experience to corroborate the with this experience to corroborate the estimate made above it is clear that the 24,707 pupids can be supplied with the necessary text benks for $10,096.

It is not essential, however, that all children should be supplied with new text books because most of the pupils have books of their own. If parents consent to their using these it will be necessary to purchase own. It parents consent to their using these it will be necessary to purchase for those pupils only who are promoted to a higher class in September, or whose books a higher class in September, or whose books wear out during the year.

It should also be remembered that when the text-books have once been supplied it will be necessary to buy books in future only for the increased attendance from year to year and to replace books worn out or lost. In seven years less than one-quarter of the books given out were lost or worn out. To provide the necessary writing and drawing to books for the last half of this year would require an additional $3000.

pooks for the last hall of this year.

So There are two plans for supplying the socks to the schools: (a) To establish a depot and purchase the books as needed; (b) to advertise for tenders for the supply of the necesbooks at the lowest rates.

The first is the most expensive plan, entailing as it does large storeroom and additional The second is much more satisfactory.
