FARMER HARDSCRABBLE,-

Before I leave this city or give you any description of its history, and beau ties, I must tell you of my route from the town of Interlaken, between the mountains, and thence by way of the cities Berne, Fibourg, and Lausanne, the latter situate on Lake Leman.

I have referred to Interlaken as being between mountains, and all who have seen it will endorse the descriptive words I employ. The traveller by way of the Bruhnig pass, which I have described in a previous letter, passes down the Lake Brientz, from the town of Brientz at its head, an after his visit to the celebrated Giespach Falls, down the Lake Brientz, from the town of Brientz at its head, and after his visit to the celebrated Gies each Falls, which he finds on his left, goes on to nearly the foot of the Lake, when he takes rail, and passing a few miles along a valley, to its most narrow point, he finds himself at once in this romantic spot, located in a valley about half a mile wide, apparently. On the right, as we whisk into the town, we pass at the very base of a mountain about three thousand feet high, and abruptly steep, while on the left, and apparently almost at our feet, the toworing peaks of the Alps seemingly touch the arch of the heavens, their smmmits glistening with the rays of the sun darting upon the snow, which has covered them since the creation of the world. The snow covered peak, which excites the most interest in the beholder, is called the "Juhng Frau," whose peak is of pyramidal form, and viewing it, as I did with my and of the content of th covered peak, which excites the most interest in the beholder, is called the "Juhng Frau," whose peak is of pyramidal form, and viewing it, as I did with my glass, from the top of "Hotel Victoria," on a clear morning, presents a very beautiful appearance, the huge wreaths of snow, projecting over the masses below them, being clearly seen. It is said that this peak of the Alps is thirteen thousand six hundred and seventy-one feet above the sea level. The river Aare coming down through the river Aare coming down through the populous Alpine Valley, of Marienburg, through this town and Lake Thun, ultimately pours its accumulated waters into the great Rhine, far away in the distance. Visitors to this town, and stopping over the Sabbath, have the privilege of religious services in English, according to the respective forms of the English and Presbyterian churches, and your correspondent personally enjoyed the the privilege of both services, on the Sabbath I spent there. The period of tourists' visits extends from middle of June to middle of September, and I was informed they number thirty thousand annually in the total, and, judging was informed they number thirty thousand annually in the total, and judging from the swarms I met there, I accept the statement as proximately correct, at least. As I stood viewing the little quaint looking cottages of the Swiss peasantry dotting the apparently inaccessible mountain sides, and in some cessible mountain sides, and in some cost of the lake side being called ouchey. Our trip down the lake was both exciting and interesting, and the atmosphere, for this climate, delightfully cools are the line of powerfully down the pent area of the lake,
