all over the dominion has been centered upon the state funeral taking place in Halifax. As we predicted in a previous issue the magnificent scale upon which this was car-ried out made this tuneral easily eclipse all other occasions of the kind experienced in the history of the dominion. It is rumored that the entire service will cost the country something over $50,000, in addition to that expended by the Imperial government in sending the body home, which would certainly amount to a good many thousands more. Doubtless there are many who will believe that it would have been better to ave saved this money, or expended it upon the living, in the way of some provision for the widow and family of the late premier; but the interest taken in his tragic death by Her Majesty and the great honors shown to his remains by the Imperial government seemed to leave no course open to the author Ities on this side but to complete the melancholy function upon the same magnificent scale in which it had been begun; and in doing this many of the former opponents of the late leader joined as heartily as any of his political friends in carrying the programme to completion. This is particularly the case with the local premier, Hon. W. S. Fielding. In cancelling all his political engagements immediately on receipt of the ews of Sir John Thompson's death, in placing the Legislative Council Chamber at the disposal of the committee, and in assisting in arranging and carrying out the details of in or respect behind any of the late premier's warmest political friends in manifesting his sympathy and performing kindly acts.

This, indeed, is one of the peculiar features of our system of party government. Our newspapers and politicians criticise, misrepresent and abuse their political opponents while living, and then turn around and partially canonize them when dead. For these reasons it is not till after one of our leading statesmen dies that the general public can form much of an estimate of his true worth. How much better indeed would it in creating in excellent style by Mr. and Mrs. Langley of the Grand Central Hotel.

After ample justice, had been done to the good things provided by our hosts, the rest of the evening was most enjoyably spent in addresses by various members of the Lodge and an excellent programme of music under the direction of Bro. Geo. H. Dixon, assisted by Miss Minine Dodge.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance of the brethren was some what limited, but the evening was most enjoyably spent, and the festivities were joyably spent, and the festivities were brought to a pleasant close at about eleven of the Valley Telephone Company, limited, will be held in Oddfellows' Hall, Middleton, on Thursday, February 14th, 1895, at half-past three o'clock, p. m.

Since confederation Canada has had four premiers, and it is worthy of note that all of them have died since the last dominion election. One of them, Hon. Alexander Mokazie, was buried at Sarnia, in Western Ontario; another, Sir John McDonald, in the city of Kingston; a third, Sir John Abbot, in the city of Montreal; while the fourth was last week laid at rest in his native city of Halifax. In the years to come these will be interesting spots to the student of the early history of our young dominion.

—A late steamer from Halifax to Newfoundland took down $150,000 in gold and silver were no fine and another shipment of species should help to provide a circulating medium for the island, and relieve to some extent the terrible distress said to prevail there. Since the late financial crash Newfoundland has virtually been a country without money. By that event every dollar of cash in the island, save what little gold and silver were in circulation, became of little or no value. The case was unique in the annals of commercial history, and the destitution and distress caused by this condition of things has been much greater among the people of the island than would be the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the case with us if we wer case with us if we were to find some day that every bank note in circulation in the province had suddenly lost its value. In addition to this, the day's proceedings in that district were enlivened with seven murders, two persons "badly beaten up," one "shot through the forehead," another "shot in the hip," and a number of others given souveriers of the day's interesting proceedings. Evidently the civilization of the south has yet in many places much room for improvement.

—The many friends of the Wolfville in situations among our readers will doubtless be pleased to learn that the difficulties through which Acadia Seminary has of late been passing have all been met and so adjusted as to place that institution in a position to retain the confidence and patronage of its friends and the general public. Considerable new blood has been infused into the teaching staff, in securing which the governing body appear to have used every effort to obtain the very best talentavailable. The Seminary has a ceroord which comparers favorably with that of the college.
