

be found one of the most useful books of reference to the practitioner ; and although it is only devoted to a limited number of diseases, yet the importance of those to which Dr. Pemberton has directed his researches, as well as the limited means of cure which we possess against many of them, it is yet entitled to rank among the most valuable productions in the science of Medicine ; and we do not hesitate to say that it will contribute in no little degree, to maintain the exalted Professional reputation and eminence which its distinguished author deservedly enjoys in the opinion of his contemporaries both at home and abroad.