unity constituting the nation and the higher institutions.

The head must remain the head but one must not neglect the fingers.

The head must remain the head, and no longer neglect the arms.

The head must remain the head, and no longer neglect the limbs.

The head must govern the whole, and no longer neglect the units.

The head must govern the whole, and no longer neglect the various parts.

That is what everybody admits in principle, in abstracto, in the conception of ideas; but most of all, that is what facts must express in concrete action, in present monetary, economic and political terms by present governments, by present ministers, by the present Minister of Finance, who controls and holds all monetary, economic and political machinery as regards money circulation, that means of exchange, that social instrument which is used for all transactions between men in the material, intellectual and spiritual fields nowadays.

All this renovation of leadership toward the progress of the unit, of the human person, of the individual as a component part of the whole can and must be carried out within the regular frameworks of our present monetary, economic and political machinery, within the framework of free enterprises, of private property, under the powerful and able leadership of a truly democratic government, that is devoutly dedicated to the service of the people while protecting the interests and capital of large private enterprises.

A careful study of the program I am introducing today under the title "Personal Vital Right", will be sufficient to convince the most apprehensive masters and the most fervent devotees of our present tradition.

All the rights of man must be expressed in dollar signs.

That is the central point of all consolidation of acquired wealth.

The "Personal Vital Right" is a simple technique, a very simple formula of administration which requires no new legislation, no new institution, no new mechanism; it can be worked out within the normal monetary, economical and political mechanisms used at present.

I do not profess to have invented anything new.

I do not profess to have discovered anything miraculous.

I do not profess to have dethroned the present scientists.

I do not profess to have superseded the present politicians.

I do not profess to have overthrown the present financiers.

I simply want to impart to you the results of my research and my findings while I watch you all.

The conclusion is quite simple. Do keep acting the same way, each one of you in his own place, in the same institutions, having in mind solely the new mentality, and striving, with your enlightened intellect, toward unity, the human being and his needs, at the same time aiming in your institutions at the capital gain.

All this may be done without changing anything almost without anybody noticing it. Everything takes place in the mind of the administration. If you belong to such administration, you alone are concerned, and nobody else. Other people will benefit from the result and congratulate you when the time comes. But the administration has to prepare the implementation of the program, of the technique, of the formula, which consists only in aiming at unity in order to reach the whole, in aiming at the human being to reach the whole, in aiming at the progress of each individual to attain prosperity for the country, the nation, your institutions.

If you hunt geese, you have to kill the birds one by one in order to get the flock. To milk a herd of cows, you have to milk them one by one. To build 1,000 Buick cars, even through mass production, you have to build them one by one. Every figure is a series of units, even in economy. A million is made up of dollars.

Even if the intelligentsia and the millionaires are used to abstract calculations in real life we have to abide by the unit. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is slow.

Even the most learned, the most famous doctor—

The Chairman: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but it is six o'clock.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?
