Smart Little Hats of Taffeta. Moire and Crepe

With the Small French Sailor as a Prime Favorite

LL THE CHIC, JAUNTY LITTLE SHAPES of Spring, made up in silks of various smart weaves and decked according to coming vogue with pom-poms and odd palm leaf mounts-these are what you will find in interesting array in the Millinery Department when you come in on Tuesday or the following days. They are Spring styles adapted cleverly to present use and marked at prices of distinct moderation — such hats as add new life, so to speak, to the jaded Winter wardrobe. Foremost in the showing are the chic little sailors developed in taffeta, in crin or tagel straw with printed crepe crowns, or in soft silk of one kind or another-the trimming consisting of a tiny nosegay of flowers or a dashing little quill of ribbon. These are the craze in New York at the present moment, and will be appreciated by many who have been watching for their appearance here. Prices range from $5.50 to $7.25. They are obtainable in deep sweet pea pink, in Labrador blue, in tan and in black.

Another collection of tailored hats consists of turbans, and small hats with a high left-side flare, the same fashioned in black, blue, brown, mahogany and tan taffets and in black moire. Pom-poms perched on the edge of the brim, back and front, are a favorite form of trimming, with the tall slender mount of silk or fancy feather as a modish alterna tive. Prices for these run from $3.75

And in untrimmed shapes is a splendid selection in new upturned designs in tagel, Milan and mohair straws in purple, tan, blue and black. -Second Floor, Yonge St.

If the Anti-Suffragists knew about Miriam, I am afraid they might say "I told you so." For she has indeed done what the antis claim a woman is likely to do. Just as she had got MIRIAM'S nicely started on a Career, having attained to a fair infaced on a casting a vote at municipal elections, a man appeared on the scene-a certain particular man with a strong will and a gentle way, and forthwith career, vote, income and independence were weighed in the balance and found wanting. Miriam, who had always managed to say "no" to the vital question, now said "yes," and proceeded straightway to behave as though woman's chiefend is happiness, a husband, and a home of her own.

way to behave as though woman's chiefend is happiness, a husband, and a home of her own.

And now they are married and give promise of living happily ever afterwards. But it is not this which is remarkable. Plenty of other people who have been married two months cherish the idea that they are the most fortunate beings in the Universe. It is that home of Miriam's own which is unique. As a general thing a bride's house is inclined to be rather insipid, to look a little like the wedding cake-rather pallid and conventional. But Miriam's was mediow and distinctive from the beginning. Whether the Career had anything to do with it, I am not prepared to say. How a Vocation with its broadening, individualizing influence affects one's native knack of selecting a curtain and hanging a picture is too big a question to stop and discuss now. All I know is that Miriam is a dear, clever little girt with a dash of poetry in her soul, and her house is just like her.

And since houses and the furnishing thereof are a standard topic in this little. column of yours and mine, let me tell you about some of the rooms in Miriam's dove-cote.

Imagine an armful of pale purple lilac with a few wild rosebuds tangled in among with a few rosebuds tangled in among them. If you can picture the combination of tones you will have an idea of the color scheme of the drawing-room. The walls are done in a paper patterned all over with mauve and pink petals, interspersed with green foliage—a fascinating English chintz design. The curtains are of fine mauve repp, the same material covering the great soft pillowed soft fine mauve repp, the same material covering the great soft pillowed soft drawn up within comfortable distance of the fireplace. A wing chair and another all-over upholstered one are likewise covered in mauve, two or three low wicker chairs having cushions of chintz very like the wall paper. A couple of Oriental rugs in dainty Persian tints stretch themselves casually across the polished floor, and on a Sheraton of sensible size—one of their most treasured wedding presents—stands a bronze regding lamp with an addarbible. most treasured wedding presents—stands a bronze reading lamp with an adorable Empire shade in pale rose pink. Smaller candle lamps with pink shades are distributed about the room, a couple of pink cushions fill up the corners of the big sofa, ferns and pink primulas are here and there on tables and stands, and on gale days; a bowl of malmaison carnations radiate their loveliness from addriants desk between the two windows. White emamel bookshelves run along two affithe walls, but because of the patterned paper the pictures are few—just three or four clear little black and white etchings above the mantelpiece. When the lights are lit under the pink shades and Miriam is there somewhere in a little rose crepe frock that she has, no one wonders that He looks serenely content.

The dining-room has white woodwork and crimson walls, with mahogany furniture in a quaint Hepplewhite designtheir only extravagance, by the way. Odd bits of willow china serve as receptacles for the ferns and bulbs that occupy the deep window ledges, and a Chinese silk runner laid across the round table contributes another happy touch of old bine. Several old portraits and a group of old miniatures look exactly right on the crimson walls.

Space forbids any adequate description of the rooms upstairs. His particular sanctum is a nocturne in brown, the only touch of contrast being found in the yellow shade on the lamp. The chairs are perfect coverts of comfort, and the big dark oak writing table, with its brass fittings, is a most interesting epitome of convenience.

There is not a grand or elaborate thing in Miriam's house, but everyone who crosses the threshold is struck by its
