French foreign minister. News of M. Delcasse's appointment reached the bourse toward the close, and caused a sharp general decline, owing to expectations that this would complicate Franco-German relations and delay the ratifications of the Moroccan treaty.

Newspapers with close financial connections, like The Tageblatt, and Boursen Courier, however, print editorials of a reassuring character. The Courier says: "M. Delcasse has repeatedly shown that he no longer champions the sharper attitude towards Germany. He has profited, as a clever man, by the lessons of late events."

The Tageblatt says: "German policy has accommodated itself to Anglo-French relations, in which Great Britain, not France, is the dangerous factor." The Cologne Gazette's inspired Beriin despatch says: "We see no ground why we should not get along with M. Delcasse. We await him unperturbed, and hope that he will justify his reputation as a discreet man."
