Offer for Famous Ruins.

Loudon Despatch in New York Times.

It is announced that the famous ruins of the abbey at Glastonbury, Somerset, are in the market, and that an offer for them has been received from the United States, The ruins of the abbey, founded in the sixth century, constitute the chief interest of Glastonbury for visitors. The first English Christian church is said to have been built by that town. According to legend, it was founded by Joseph of Arimathea, who stopped to rest at Glastonbury and placed his staff in the ground. It took root, and from it sprang the famous Glastonbury thorn, which, according to popular superstition, blossomed every Christmas Day, The original thorn was destroyed by the Puritans, but grafts from it exist.

Of the once magnificent abbey, wnich covered 60 acres, the only remains are parts of the abbet's kitchen. These buildings were finished about a century after his death. They are fine specimens of early and transitional architecture.

Two Concerts in Massey Hall of Writer in Minneapolis Paper Gives Reason Why City Should Not Lose Its Citizenship.

The Dominion of Canada has it in mind to emasculate the citizenship of Ottawa, to take way from the people their political rights and to make of the Canadian capital another such nameless nonentity as the District of Columbia, wherein all roads to personal distinction are closed save that of becoming a real estate agent for the purpose og skinning the inhocent. At least that much is intimated by Geo-F. Macdonald, who is here from Ottawa and says he is city electrician of that capital.

"While here," he says, "I shall make an investigation of your government in the District of Columbia, in which people living in the capital of Canada are much interested. Washington is one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and it is our desire to pattern after it as much as we can. Our city is being laid out with that intention. But just now we are much interested in the form of government itself, because we are seriously thinking of doin—away with our city government, with its politics, and have the general government take over 20 square miles, with the city in the centre, so that we may reap all the advantages which Washington now attains thru such an arrangement.

Washington is indeed beautiful. It is a poem in those parts which have had the favorable attention of congress, but there are alleys here filled with hordes of vicious people, presenting a more hideous plcture of filth, crime and degradation than can be found in any other American city. Washington has not always been without representative government. The latest experiment in that direction was abandoned, at the request of the people, in 1872, for the reason that the negroes and poor whites, by combining, were in control of the city and running things with a high hand. NOTICE.

E. P. KADELCECH, Sec'y. Dated at Cobalt Oct.16, 1906.

The goat is a natural browser and will often neglect good grass to trim up shrubs of leaves and small twigs. Sheep, however, prefer grass, and if given sufficient range of good grass will be slow and irregular in the work of trimming up the brush in the pasture. For that reason in the subduing of brushy lands with sheep the use of a portable fence is almost imperative. If the owner desires to have underbrush removed the grazing area must be fimited by fencing the flock into a reasonably small pasture, so that the sheep may not be fully sated on grass, if grass is scarce they will the brush and do well by the browsting.

As one section of the pasture is trimmed off the flock should be fenced upon another, and so on until the work and the work has all to be done over and the work has all to be done over again, and the work has all to be done over again next year. In case of the use of sheep or goats in clearing, the old stalks of the brush generally fall down the sheep may not be fully sated on grass. If grass is scarce they will the brush and do well by the browsting.

As one section of the pasture is trimmed off the flock should be fenced upon another, and so on until the work of course depends largely upon the size of the work of the flock. After the tract has been gone over once, if new leaves are appearing on any of the shrubs the ground should be gone over again, and if the second trimming be done in the dry weather customary in July and August there will be very little left in the brush general work on the new farm there is nothing superior to a good flock of the pasture is trimmed off the flock should be fenced upon another, and so on until the work has all to be done over again next year.
