THE FARMER AND THE AUTO. Who needs an automobile most? Is it the millionaire who goes when he gets ready? Is it the man of leisure who rides as a pastime?

It is neither of these. It is the farm er. In the funny papers the farmer is nictured as the enemy of the automo bile. He has a right to a grudge against an uncivil wild man who tears thru the country killing his chickens, frightening his horses and leaving him without even an anglogy in a cloud of blinding dust.

Yet the need of the farmer is greatest. spend so much of it on the road. His children often go to school at a distance. His business frequently takes him to town. His horses are needed for other work. His pleasures are reasonable and few.

THE FARMERS' ROADS.

That there is well-grounded reason for legislation on the automobile nuisance is apparent to everyone who knows country life. The townships of the province have built and maintained the country roads, except in a very few instances. These townships are made up to a preponderating extent of farm lands which are taxed for this pur- Farmers Appreciate Assistance in

The work that began two years ago calculot, held in Townsto during and probably with the exception of the maintenance of a thru road like the Kingston-road, east of Townsto, or the Kingston-road, east of Townston, or the Kingston-road, east of Kingston-road, east of Townston, or the Kingston-road east of Kingston-road, east of Townston, or the Kingston-road east of Kingston-road, east of Townston, or the Kingston-road, east of Townston, or the Kingston-road east of Kingston-road, east of Kingston-roa

It is not a question of preferment to him, but one of a personal responsibility for the future ideas that will obtain in the minds of the country's boys and girls. To maintain the balance between prosaic moralizing on the one hand and lingoism on the other, is the work before these men.

The wholesomeness of farm life must appeal to them. That appeal claims much careful attention from the farmers' standpoint. There is no place where life is purer at the core than in rural parts of Ontario.

The country sends a good proportion of Ontario's children to the public school. That proportion exerts a greate er influence on the affairs of the land than does any other similar part. It is on the farm that the clearest intellects are endowed with a sustaining faith and a strong body. These grow up into the freeborn, liberty-loving stalwarts that make for much in the land's executive halls. Consequently the farm demands a set of lessons that will build up character, that will develop love for the good, the true, the beautiful, and will prove that honest toll has no discount; that the farm is as hallowed a place as the counting-house, and requires and will repay the services of the cleverest student.

It is too true that the school system has worked away from the farm. It has sent our best boys to the city and professions. Not all are fitted for the farm, and such should be led in the way their capacities point. But many are best fitted to combine their mental and executive ability with the manual training of farming in care of the second combine their mental and executive ability with the manual training of farming in care of the second combine their mental and executive ability with the manual training of farming in care of the second combine the second combine their mental and executive ability with the manual training of farming in care of the second combine the training of farming in any of its varied branches. ### STEAM PLOWING IN ONTARIO.

The first steam plow ever run in the Province of Ontario on the lines of those in the west has been running for some days now on Donlands Farm, the property of Mr. W. F. Maclean, M. P.

The engine is an American-Abell 26-horsepower, and the plow is 10-furrow one, made by the Cockshutt Plow Company of Brantford. Every day's trial improves the result, and the plow now has no trouble in doing 10 acres a day with eight plows, and in a few days, when the other two plows are put on, a much better output will be the

The farmer's page of The World will give further details later on. In the meantime anybody who is interested in the subject ought to try and see this plow in operation.

It may be the beginning of a great revolution in farming in this

It takes one man to drive the engine, another to steer it, and a third to look after the plows. This Cockshutt outfit, with eight plows and three men, is now doing a great deal more work than eight teams of horses, eight men and eight single plows, and the steam plow has only to be fed when it is doing work.

Dahila roots may be stored in a cellar much the same as possioes, says Prot. Hutt. It is a good plan when digging out. Two things must be borne in mind. The auto has come to stay, and must be allowed passage over the roads. Farmers' horses, in many places, however, are being made familiar with unst not be tolerated at all, and the protection of the weak should be made of prime importance. The other is the maintenance question. The auto, with its fast-running and heavy wheels, makes the repair of the roads more urgent and costly. Those who use them has been distributed recently to the made of prime importance. The other is the interest the hort contact with the earth, there is a danger of the roots of any kind, it is advisable to have the cellar so are should bear the expense of the up-keep.
