Its political friends have been in power for nearly twelve years and have managed in that time to accumulate a record which, in the number of public and personal scandals of all kinds, has not been and cannot well be equalled. It has given out concessions of all kinds, which have enriched not the state, but fortunate individuals who had a "pull." It has sanctioned serious encroachments on provincial rights, has been associated with gross electoral corruption and has, in fact, repeated along this line all the sordid devices of the late provincial government. When The Globe summons up righteousness enough and courage enough to hold its federal friends to a strict accounting, its claim to have earned the right to pillory Premier Whitney will have more foundation than it has. No government can hope to escape censure in the details of its policy and conduct, but this at least can be said, that in all matters affecting freedom and purity of election, in the conservation of the provincial resources and franchises, in the promotion of educational reforms, in administrative efficiency, the present Ontario Government has fully established its claim to public confidence.
