low that Germany might lose the war. Lorraine provides Germany with three-quarters of her iron ore supply, and she also imports a great amount of this ore from the Verdun region. But the need for men for the German army became so urgent that the mines were stripped of German workmen, and Russian prisoners sent in disregard of all the rules of war to toil in their places. Labor by war prisoners, being akin to slave labor, is half-hearted. It has, therefore, followed that the output of German mines has greatly diminished. Moreover many of the mines have become flooded, notably those at Pienne, and none of the blast furnaces are working.

So the Germans were driven by the spectre of a coming iron shortage at home and by cupidity for the French iron fields to attack Verdun, and they planned, to keep it, the starting of a revolt in Ireland, with the full arming of the rebels and the getting up of a provisional government for the "republic." It was probably thought that Great Britain, the banker and reserve of the alliance, would be so embroiled that the government would collect the solution of the s ernment would collapse and a peace party, for such Germany counts all the present malcontents in England, assume power. This new ministry might accept a favorable offer of peace, and if it fitted in with her plans, Germany would not scruple to abandon the Irish rebels to their deserts. But this grandiose affair was foiled by French gallantry and British naval vigilance. In exasperation at her failure, and as a last desperate gamble, Casement was sent to Ireland.

The fighting in France this week-end has consisted of bardments in the region of Verdun, with the French getting the range of German batteries and effectively shelling them, of gains of two trenches on Le Mort Homme and north of Cumieres in sharp and sudden assaults by the French, and of the repulse of three German attempts to carry by storm French trenches in the Vosges. The aviators of the allies still swim the empyrean in supremacy. Since Saturday the French brought down eight German machines. The British brought down two on Saturday.

On the British front the Germans made an unwelcome discovery or the deadly nature of their own gas near Hulluch Saturday, when they released some of it and it was blown back over their own trenches. The Germans were then seen hurriedly leaving their own trenches and British gunners opened on them with shrapnel. The enemy suffered heavy casualties from the gas and the shells. A great number of ambulances came up to Hulluch to remove gas-bitten and shell-smitten men. An attack with gas on a front of 2000 yards north of the Messines-Wulverghem road was broken by British artillery fire and a small party of the foe which got into the British trenches was bombed out. An attempted bombing attack by the enemy at another place was checked by British machine gun fire and bombs. Active underground warfare is proceeding in the Loos salient. Owing to the sea of mud which still prevails over a large section of the British front, any extended military movement is precluded till dry

The surrender of the Anglo-Indian garrison of 9000 nmen-3000 British and 6000 Indians, at Kut-el-Amara, is more exasperating than im-But it should not be minimized, for it will do something to restore the tottering prestige of Enver Pasha and his German mentors; it will put more of the fighting spirit into Turkey. But since the Russians are near Diarbekr and Nisbin and are expected shortly to cut the Bagdad railway, it is difficult to see how the Turks will be able to remove their prisoners out of Mesopotamia. They will probably have to keep them at Kut. The difficulties of General Townshend were caused by his unsuccessful advance on Bagdad. It was lately published in The London Times that General Townshend had reported against this undertaking and was driven into it by his superior officers. As this campaign was opened and conducted until recently by the Indian Government, the enemies of Kitchener cannot blame him for the mishap. After things got into a hopeless muddle the conduct of the campaign was placed in the hands of the British general staff, under Sir William Robertson. He was given charge of the stable after the horse had been stolen and the thief got too great a land: start for him to be landed. The best that can be done is to retrieve the situation when the ground is dry enough for manoeuvring. Kut would have been relieved but for the heavy inundations of a flat country furrowed by the remains of ancient dykes and watercourses, with the barrages allowed to go to ruin. So the water which still runs in some of the ancient channels spreads out over the country. When the hot weather of summer comes, the ground dries up like a parchment. It was under these and strikes for her freedom, having conditions that General Townshend defeated the Turks near Kut-el-Amara organized and trained her manhood about where the British relief expedition is held up in a battle fought last thru her secret revolutionary organi-

The Russians last night reported that near Diarbekr, in the Caucasus region, they repulsed an offensive by Turkish advanced guards. This announcement signifies that the Russian advanced guards have pushed forward very rapidly from the mountains south of Bitlis, and that they have encountered the advance guards of another Turkish force, which is being moved forward to oppose the advance on Diarbekr and Nisbin, and that probably another battle will be fought in this theatre. The Russians have gained the full initiative in this campaign. That signifies that they have forced the enemy to make his dispositions conform to theirs, and so they have the Turko-German plans of campaign in their hip-pocket. So it may be expected that they will be able to worst the Turks, Gas was also used by the Germans in making an attack on the British positions on a front of 2000 yards north of the Messines-Wulverghem road about 1 o'clock this morning. Their infantry broke and fled when it came under the British artillery fire. At one point a party of Germans broke into the British lines and was bombed out again at once. Combined with this assault the Germans attempted to make an attack with bombs near Hollandscheschuur and they were repulsed by machine gunfire and bombs.

An unsuccessful German raid was reported from Fricourt. Much active underground warfare is reported from the Loos salient and today hostile work along the Ypres-Pilkem roas were effectively bombarded by British artillery.
