ELECTION SEQUEL HEARD IN COURT

Two Fines for Assault Follow Family Argument Over Candidate.

As a result of an argument over the recent civic elections a family quarrel was aired in the police court this morning. Magistrate Henderson was charged with assaulting Mrs. Lillian Lawson and while the proceedings were going on the defendants wife was also implicated and a similar charge was made out against her. Magistrate Henderson advised a settlement, but the defendant declined. Mrs. Lawson testified that she was visiting the home of the defendant, who is a brother-in-law, last Monday evening and an argument started over one of the candidates in the civic election. Her remarks about the candidate were resented by the defendant. She said he called her ignorant, low and no good, shoved her against a stove, as a result of which she sustained a cut on her head and bruises. She said the defendant's wife also seized her and she was ejected. At this stage a charge was made against Mrs. Watson for acting together with her husband and assaulting the plaintiff. The witness denied throwing a chair at the defendant, she said she had struck him while he was dressing and that she had sustained the cut on her head as a result of tripping over a door step while falling on the stairs and that she refused to leave when ordered to do so by his wife. Magistrate Henderson again advised a settlement, but his advice was not heeded. Mrs. L. S. Peters, mother of the plaintiff, then told of her daughter's injuries. The defendant then took the stand. He said he was an employee of T. McAvity & Son. He told of the conversation which led up to the trouble. He said that the young woman had entered his bedroom and kept arguing and while he was dressing had kicked him and also thrown a chair at him. He maintained that he had fallen in self defence, that he told her to leave the house and that she refused. He said she had received the cut on her head as a result of tripping on a door step and had fallen against the stove. Mrs. Watson corroborated this testimony. Magistrate Henderson said that the marks on the plaintiff's body were strong evidence that unnecessary force had been used and that if they had wished her to leave they could have made her do so without injuring her. He said he was sorry that the case was not settled out of court, but that they were determined that it should not. He found both defendants guilty of assault and fined them $10 each.
