Mr. O'Brien had referred to certain telegrams sent by prominent people during the campaign of 1900. Mr.

O'Brien said that Hon. Geo. E. Foster was defeated by nine hundred and seventy votes, but he forgot to tell hisaudience that the man who accomplished his defeat was now with Mr. Foster and Dr. Daniel and himself. The telegram sent by J. G. H. Bergeron to the effect that if the govern- his scoring of the liberal policy proment machine did not work too hard duced great enthusiasm. Mr. O'Brien quoted W. B. Northrup, the member for West Hastings, who on the floors of parliament approved of the first proposal of the Grand Trunk. But, said Dr. Stockton, he did not tell you that his leader, Mr. Borden, had from his place publicly repudiated the view expressed by Mr. Northrup. (Great cheers).

The minister of railways had stated that anyone who voted for the conservative candidates was not worthy of citizenship. He had also stated on another occasion that the people who were opposing the transcontinental scheme were fit inmates for a lunatic asylum. The speaker thought that a minister of the crown who would give utterance to a statement of this kind was himself a fitter subject for an institution of this kind. Mr. O'Brien says that he objects to government ownership, yet he is asking for the suffrages of the people in support of a government which has purchased the Canada Eastern for $800,000 and which

A. S. WHITE.

Hon. A. S. White also received an ovation when he stepped forward. He apologized for having to speak in a somewhat lowered voice, as he had been suffering from a bad attack of influenza. His voice, however, was clear, and when uninterrupted, carried easily to the edge of the crowd. He commenced by contrasting the growth of the country under 18 years of conservative rule with the last eight years of liberal regime, and claimed that the government system of cold storage and efforts to open up outside markets had been the means of doubling the trade of the country; and he thought would not be showing their intelligence is they should vote for a change. The charge of reckless expenditure could not be proved against the government. They spent more, but they got more in return. Since coming into power the liberals had increased the expenditure in the post office department by over $1,000,000. They had opened many new offices and reduced the expense of postage, but the department was paying better now than ever. The government had also materially reduced
