

REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

How an Officer Escaped in the Grasp of a Fisherman.

One of the most adroit escapes ever effected was that of Monsieur De Boiseraut, a French Royalist officer, who outwitted the soldiers detailed to shoot him at the place of execution.

At nine o'clock in the evening, says General Terrier, the prisoners confined in the prison of Quiberton were aroused by the entrance of an officer. He held in his hand a piece of paper, and was followed by an escort of about twenty Republican soldiers.

This singular order was obeyed in silence. No one knew what it meant, and all feared the worst. The names of all the prisoners present were called with the exception of two, so that seventy miserable wretches stood in line, awaiting they knew not what!

The order to march was given, and we slowly filed out from the gloomy jail. We were marched to the borders of the sea, where a halt was made. The officer in charge then read the death-sentence, adding these words as he turned to us: 'The other prisoners will not be sentenced until further evidence is obtained, but they will be present at the execution of the condemned.'

General Le Moine then had the unfortunate men taken out, one by one, and shot. The horrible work continued for an hour, and we, whose hour was not yet come, were forced to stand by and watch our comrades perish, as we ourselves must soon do.

At last it was the turn of De Boiseraut. The four soldiers who were to shoot him said to him: 'we are very sorry, but it is the law; and now, if you have any money, give it to us.'

Monsieur De Boiseraut looked at the speaker, and a thought flashed through his brain. 'I have twenty-five guineas about me,' he replied calmly; 'but I do not wish to make any of you jealous. I will throw the coins down, and each one of you shall get what he can.'

As he spoke he showed the gold, and then with a dexterous whirl of his hand sent the coins flying in all directions. In their eagerness to possess themselves of the gold, the soldiers forgot the prisoner, and went scrambling after the glittering pieces.

De Boiseraut, who was quick of foot, seized the moment to escape, and fled with the speed of desperation. On toward the open country he ran, hearing confused cries of 'Halt! Halt!' mingled with the report of musketry, as he sped on through the moonlight! He gained a wheatfield, which luckily had not yet been harvested, and concealed himself amid the high, waving grain.

All night he could hear the tread of the patrolmen who were in pursuit of him. The noises gradually ceased, however, and at daybreak all was still. He ventured now to raise his head and look about. Worn out with fatigue, the soldiers had fallen asleep, and the coast was clear. Near by he saw a cottage, and emboldened by the thought that the inhabitants of this province were faithful to the king, he determined to seek admittance. He knocked at the door. It was opened by the woman of the house.

'Ah! my good woman,' he cried, 'will you not save a poor man who has just escaped death?' The woman made a gesture of assent and of warning.

'How lucky it is that my husband is not yet awake!' she replied. 'He is a Republican. But quick! Climb into the garret!' And for three months De Boiseraut was concealed by the generous peasant. The village cure's sister brought his food, books, pen and ink, and as soon as the garison was diminished and the vigilance of the search for him relaxed, he escaped from the province disguised as a fisherman.

A Boston jeweller who has a talent for advertising, as well as a genius for mechanics, has been reminding his patrons, lately that 'a watch is the smallest, most delicate machine that was ever constructed of the same number of parts. About one hundred and seventy-five different pieces of material enter into its construction, and upward of twenty-five different pieces of material enter into its construction, and upward of twenty-four hundred separate operations are comprised in its manufacture.'

'Some of the facts connected with its performance are simply incredible, when considered in total. A blacksmith strikes several thousand blows on his anvil in a day, and is right glad when Sunday comes around; but the roller jewel of a watch makes every day, and day after day, 432,000 impacts against the fork, or 167,680, 000 blows in a year without stop or rest, or 3,163,600,000 in a short space of twenty years.

'These figures are beyond the grasp of our feeble intellects; but the marvel does not stop here. It has been estimated that the power that moves the watch is equivalent to only four times the force used in a flea's jump; consequently it might be called a four-flap-power. One horse-power would suffice to run 370,000,000 watches.

'Now the balance-wheel of a watch is moved by this four-flap-power one and forty-three one-hundredths inch with each vibration—three thousand five hundred and fifty-eight and three-quarters miles continuously in one year.

'It doesn't take a large can of oil to lubricate the machine on its thirty-five hundred mile 'run.' It requires one tenth of a drop to oil the entire watch for a year's service. But it has great need of that one-tenth of a drop.

If you would preserve the time-keeping qualities of your watch, you should take it to a competent watch-maker once every eighteen months.'

THE CHILD AND THE BEARS.

Instances Where Wild Animals have been Kind to Children.

Since the legendary days of Romulus and Remus many instances have been recorded where beasts of prey, having opportunity, have refrained from harming a small child. The Pittsburg Dispatch cites an interesting incident of this character.

Little Helma Urtler wandered away from her home near Snowshoe, Penn., one day in the fall, and was swallowed up in the wilds of the Alleghany Mountains. The greatest alarm was felt, and for two days every man, woman and child of the neighborhood turned out to beat the woods.

On the third day four lumbermen found the little girl a mile and a half from her home in the dense wood, playing with two bear cubs. The men called to her, and with a glad cry she ran toward them. The two bear cubs began to whine, and a moment afterward a large female bear dashed out from the underbrush, evidently to dispute the right of the men to carry off her protegee.

The men had their axes, and after a hard struggle, they despatched the bear, and took the cubs for pets—a fine reward for the bear's care of the child! Frits Yanser, one of the lumbermen, was badly lacerated in the arm by the bear's jaws.

Helma was uninjured by her sojourn among the bears, and was soon restored to her anxious parents.

A Fashionable and Money Saving Work. Home dyeing is now one of the true home arts, a work that is artistic, an occupation that has become pleasant and fashionable. People in easy circumstances who give their attention to the work of home dyeing also find it a most profitable recreation.

This increased interest in dyeing work, and the great success that attends it, comes from the use of the celebrated Diamond Dyes that are so easy to use, so true to color, so pure and brilliant, so fast and undying. A costly wool or silk dress that has become soiled or faded can in a very short space of time be made equal to a new. No garments or materials need be thrown away or sold to the second hand dealer because of lost or dingy colors. An outlay of from ten to twenty cents for Diamond Dyes will recrate every piece and save many dollars.

If you have not yet begun the easy work of home dyeing, let us assure you that you will miss a pleasure and lose money as well. Look up your faded and discolored garments at once, and use the Diamond Dyes; you will be surprised with your success.

Not Much Danger. A dash of cold, worldly knowledge falls occasionally like a wet blanket on a gush of warm sentiment, and leaves nothing more to be said.

A young man who had gone to the great city to make his fortune had written home to tell of his unexpected success in finding a job.

'I have great hopes of Archie,' said the mother, looking over the letter for the fifth or sixth time, 'it he only won't fall into expensive habits!'

'I don't think he will, Matilda,' replied the father. 'I don't think he will—on nine dollars a week.'

Life in a "Flat". The narrow quarters to which city people who live in 'apartments' consign themselves are nicely indicated by a story told by a contemporary.

In a certain city flat the wall paper had grown very dingy, but the landlord had persistently refused to replace it. At last the tenant said to his wife: 'It's no use, Julia, we shall have to put on some new paper at our own expense.' 'And take all the trouble to scrape off the old?'

Certainly not. We'll put it on right over the other.' 'John! And make the rooms smaller still!'

Agricultural Geography. First Western Farmer (at railroad station)—'You're a farmer too, eh?'

Second Western Farmer—'Yes; been farming a good many years.' First Farmer—'That so? Glad to meet ye. Where is your farm located—in the flood district, the drought section, the grasshopper region, or the cyclone belt?'
