EVERITT & BUTLER. BUY YOUR Sewing Machines Save Twenty Per Cent! FROM THE MANUFACTURER, AND The brilliant opening of the lecture season in New York, where James Anthony Froude is discussing on the interesting theme of Ireland's past, and in Boston, where George MacDonald is charming cultivated audiences with that mixture of morality, philosophy, common sense and mysticism that have made his books popular with all classes, suggests the anxious inquiry, What is to be the character of the lectures to be given in the Mechanics' Institute next winter? Are arrangements to be made for securing the services of lecturers of ability? Are we to be allowed to hear any of the intellectual giants who are marching over the continent to the music of applauding audiences? Are we to have nothing but free offerings? We fear that nothing has yet been done, but it is not too late to do something. There is yet time, no doubt, to secure the services of some eminent men and women, and there is surely literary spirit enough in St. John to pay the expenses that may be incurred in bringing first-class talent to our city. We know there is every disposition to pay liberally for first-class entertainments in St. John. No manager has ever been disappointed by want of patronage when he has afforded St. John a chance to hear first-class talent. All it requires is that some one should take the responsibility of going ahead with the matter.

subscribed for paying the expenses of these matters, though it did not come in the days of Henry VIII. The chiefs of the Geraldines were collected to be an angry tribe with Henry, and indeed all the barons appeared well disposed to England. Up to the time of the Reformation the Pope had really been sovereign in Ireland, and England only governed the island in the Pope's name. But an Irish Parliament now revoked this state of things and declared individual allegiance to England, and the principal nobles went to Westminster and personally did homage to Henry. Henry VIII was indeed a great favorite with the Irish, and while he lived Ireland was subdued. But as soon as he died there followed the birth of the Protestant religion, and a great change came about in Irish sentiment. Henry had left the Catholic religion practically unopposed, except so far as the question of the Papal supremacy was involved. His immediate successor, however, declared war upon the mass, and a ritual in use for many centuries was abolished with a stroke of the pen. Then the Puritans began a crusade of the most extreme character upon the old religion, and Ireland, for the future, arrayed herself against English Puritanism and began to seek for allies among the Catholic Powers of Europe. Mr. Froude then traces in vivid colors the Irish policy of Elizabeth, stigmatising it as terribly cruel. He shows how the Catholic bishops and the Catholic hierarchy to declare allegiance to her, and how she punished them for so doing. This law was passed in order that the English Catholics should not be dissatisfied by an avowed distinction between the English Catholics. But the law was not enforced, and Elizabeth even invited Irish nobles to her court. It was then that the English army of the Earl of Essex landed in Ireland, and a mob of Irish peasants, with pikes and sticks, could have driven it into the sea. But Elizabeth would not allow the Irish to do this. She ordered the Earl of Essex to march against the Irish, and to burn the houses of the Irish nobles. This was the beginning of the English wars in Ireland. The English soldiers, driven by the Irish into a desperate struggle, were defeated at the battle of Keshdown. The English then retreated to the coast, and the Irish pursued them. The English then retreated to the coast, and the Irish pursued them. The English then retreated to the coast, and the Irish pursued them.

The famous Englishman in America must be deeply impressed with the evidence that everywhere meet them: of the essentially British character of their hearts. It may be safely assumed that they never fully realized how much of all this is dear to them as part of their inheritance is also claimed by the Americans. Literary men—men who love best, and glory most in the past, must be surprised at finding their thoughts and aspirations so thoroughly appreciated in America. Everywhere are monuments of Shakespeare, Milton, and Burns, the Englishmen's most cherished authors, and a monument to Sir Walter Scott is to be unveiled in Central Park, New York, on Saturday next. Wm. Cullen Bryant, who delivered the oration at the unveiling of the Shakespeare monument near the same spot, will make this occasion historic by his eloquence. It has been rumored a half dozen times that Emperor William of Germany has declared the San Juan boundary dispute in favor of the United States, and fewer and feebler rumors have asserted the contrary. The United States Secretary of State has been reported to be hourly expecting a decision for the next three months, and no decision has come. It is known, however, that the 'juris consults have finished their labors, and all that is required is the signature of the Emperor to their finding. The map makers are the most interested, and we assume they are kept in a really cruel. A dozen publishers have been ready for issuing a new map for the last six months, and still they await the imperial verdict.

There is a great revival of ship-building in the New England States. The activity in the building yards of Maine, Connecticut and Massachusetts is due to the increased importance of the shipping trade, and to the fact that the United States has advanced so largely, and to the act of the last session of Congress that allows builders a rebate on duties paid on ship-building material. Ireland Under the Tudors and the Stuarts. Mr. Froude delivered the second of his course of lectures on Ireland at New York on Friday evening. We give the substance of this deeply interesting historical study of Ireland as he has described the Norman conquest of Ireland. He now proposed to direct their attention to an English policy which he had accused of trying to whitewash—Henry VIII, the English Emperor. Froude says he would not have any objection to revert to Henry's nationalistic difficulties, but simply to his efforts to restore law and order in Ireland. Henry did not seek to confiscate the lands of Irish nobles nor to impose English laws upon them. He simply desired to bring order out of anarchy. One of his measures was in reference to the system of absenteeism, which was then, as it had been ever since, the great evil in Ireland, but he had not met with very great success. As was stated by an English commissioner, the Irish peasantry was at that time an industrious and orderly class, and that functionary recommended that they should be arrested and used as a sort of police. But this policy unfortunately was not adopted. Henry instead attempted a sort of benevolent rule, and entrusted the government of Ireland to the Earl of Kildare, the head of the Geraldines. But the Geraldines, though they were much the same as other people while in London, became in Ireland more Irish than the Irish themselves, and kept on in the bad old way of letting everybody do as they liked and absconding with the tender mercies of all who were strong enough to oppress them. Henry, finding his affairs were going, had Kildare arrested and thrown into the Tower. Kildare soon thereafter revolted, and, beginning his revolt by murdering an archbishop, was finally executed for the crime. About this time there occurred the revolt of certain portions of Europe against the See of Rome, and it was a matter of some interest which side Irishmen would espouse. Religion, up to that time, had been largely on the Irish, and especially upon the Irish gentry, many of whose bishops had indulged in large families. But a change was coming in Recalled a most amusing, scientific and astonishing entertainment by Prof. Stone, Thursday evening, Oct. 24. To the Revue. Yesterday afternoon a young man named Michael Donovan residing on St. Patrick street, charged with breaking the door of Thomas Smith's shop, who taken home, and his mother and sisters demanded to see the warrant, but when it was shown Donovan refused to go and policeman Wilkins in attempting to take him was attacked by the mother and sisters in a lively style. Assistance being procured Donovan was taken to the Station but resisted so that when he arrived there nearly all the clothes were off his back. His mother afterwards came down and was also arrested. This morning Donovan was fined $6 for resisting and paid $3 for the damage to Smith's shop. The mother was exonerated. County Court. The October term of the Saint John County Court opened at the Court House at 11 o'clock this morning. His Honor Justice Wilkins on the bench. The attendance of spectators was fairly large. The following were sworn a grand jury: George Stymest, foreman; Saml. McGirr, Thos. Elliott, B. Hevener, Jas. Price, John Mullin, Joseph Mackay, D. K. Leach, Jas. Adams, Jr., O. D. Weston, H. Allen, M. N. Dewers, Dennis Bellis, Thos. Daley, D. J. Seely, Alex. Stewart, E. Maher, John McLaughlin, John B. Allen, A. J. Armstrong, P. Chisholm, Joseph McLaughlin, C. O. Handford. His Honor, in addressing the grand jury, thanked them for their faithful attendance as indicative of the interest in the affairs of the county. He then referred to the case of Gurney, charged with the larceny of a horse, and commented upon the fact seen in this as well as other cases, where the articles stolen was purchased for a small price, that the receiver should have a reasonable belief they were stolen. The cases of the boy Conroy and others, charged with breaking and entering a house in Carleton, and that of Hainey, charged with manslaughter were also dealt with. In the latter case he stated it was not the intention to present a bill at the present court, but to wait until the November Circuit of the Supreme Court. His Honor regretted that a preliminary examination had not been made in the matter that the magistrates know in what position he stood. The Grand Jury returned but had not found bills when the Court adjourned at one. There are 15 civil suits, and the first is Foster vs. Jordan. Don't forget the opening night of Prof. Stone, at Mechanics' Institute, Thursday evening, Oct. 24th. 31

Larceny of Clothing. James Reynolds and Wm. Hawthorn, lodgers at the "Tremont House" boarding establishment on King street, made information at the Police Office this morning against two young men named John Coffey and John Hallen for stealing a quantity of clothing from their room. It appears that yesterday Reynolds and Hawthorn missed each a suit of clothing from their room after Coffey and Hallen, who had been boarding at the house, had left. Suspecting the parties, they procured policeman McLaren, who, on proceeding to Grand Bay, found the prisoners with the clothing in their possession. The examination in the case is fixed for this afternoon. A Long Wanted Party Found. For some time past the police have been on the look-out for a young man named Joseph Doherty against whom a number of serious charges, principally for assaults have been pending. It will be remembered that about six months ago Doherty was arrested in Lower Cove one Saturday night, but rescued by the crowd from the police. It was at that time that Sergeant Owens had his head cut open with a stone, and Policeman Richard Evans was also the victim of an assault. Yesterday Sergeant Watson and Policemen Hayes and McLaren found Doherty drunk and acting in a disorderly manner on Britain street, and arresting him attempted to bring him to the Station. He then offered the most violent resistance, and even went so far during his kicking as to break two of Policeman Hayes's ribs and inflict other injuries. He was at last put into a wagon and brought to the Station, followed by a large crowd. This morning he pleaded guilty; the charge of drunkenness was fined $5. He was then sent up to jail until Saturday, when the information made against him by the police and others will be produced.
