

Gamers: "We're not demon worshipers, we're just having fun."

By Jason Wheaton and Paula Dawson

Students passing through the SUB will no doubt have noticed, at one time or another, the certain group of people surrounded by dice, maps and charts. Questions may be raised as to what they are doing. Constant talk about fantastic monsters, alien planets and bloody wars tends to raise a few eyebrows.

This article will attempt to explain exactly what these people are doing in the Blue Lounge.

They are a group of gamers who met through Enbicon, the gaming convention held last fall. Gamers are people who play any number of Role playing games. Gaming conventions are when a group gets together to play these in an organized fashion.

Most role-playing games have one thing in common. Characters are "rolled" up (hence the dice) and gamers use them to go on a myriad of adventures designed by the D.M. (Dungeon Master). The number and variety of such games is immense.

The most common genre is Fantasy, Dungeons and Dragons and Advanced Dungeons and Dragons which is the most popular.

There is also the science-fiction genre, including Robotech, Battletech, Space Master, Traveller and many others.

Finally there are the "War" games, set in World War Two, Vietnam and survival in Post-Nuclear War Earth.

For these people it is not all fun and games. When asked, the gamers stated that they had plans of developing their own game and perhaps publishing their own books and adventures. The group was the core of Enbicon last year and are planning for Enbicon Two next fall. However, the group's main goal is to become an organized and recognized UNB club.

The players sat they do not want to disturb anyone and in return, do not want to be disturbed. Yet, the gamers do wish to extend an invitation to all interested students to join them, regardless of experience.

They would also like to leave the general student body with this comment. "Remember - we're not demon worshipers, we're just having fun."
