The Bishop of Exeter, in speaking at his diocesan conference on the Lincoln judgment, as confirmed by the Privy Council, denied that it involved a triumph for any party. The usages allowed had no connection with Romish and strange doctrine. The whole verdict made for liberty and order.

Being interviewed on the subject of the "growing increase of intemperance among women," to which his lordship alluded at a recent Mansion House meeting, the Bishop of London said that it would be important to ascertain, if possible, in what way the evil began, whether from greater facilities for secrecy or from different causes. As for the remedy, its foundation must rest in a permanent change for the better in the people's own character.

The Bishop of Lincoln, in his recent charge, spoke with singular moderation and dignity on the subject of the recent Privy Council decree, in which his interest was so personal. In the course of his remarks, he said that the liberty secured by the recent decision of the Privy Council in certain matters of ceremonial required two lines of caution: (1) The use of ceremony should ever be subject to the law of charity and edification; (2) the doctrinal significance which individuals of the clergy or laity amongst them might attach to ceremonies should be honestly in accordance with the teaching of the Church of England.

An alderman addressing the English Church Congress on "The attitude of the Church towards labour combinations in respect to their aims and objects," is not only an unusual event, but also a gratifying indication that the Church is putting itself in the right place with both men and things. Alderman Phillips' paper was based on true religious principles and did not lack spirit. "Win the men first, and then they will come to church," was one bit of advice, and he proved the worth of it by citing the fact that he had seen a mission church crammed with men at seven in the morning, and on a festival had seen fifty men at a five o'clock celebration. The workman would hold the baby while his wife went up to the altar to communicate, and then take his turn likewise.—Living Church.

The Bishop of Chester, writing to the secretary of the Durham branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, says he does not see why total abstinents should not support his licensing plan, which is a modification of the Gothenburg system. Many hundreds of people have daily visited the grave of Tennyson in Westminster Abbey. It has been filled and railed off to protect the many wreaths and emblems which lie around it. The contemplated evacuation of Uganda by the East Africa Company, which has been ordered by the English Cabinet, virtually means abandonment of this point by the missionaries, and imperilment of the lives of the Christian converts. Surely a sad outcome of the enterprise inaugurated by the noble Mackay. The only hope now is in the action of the next meeting of Parliament.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, speaking at his Diocesan Conference at Bristol on Wednesday, said if it was the Lord's will that there should be a true reunion of Churchmen and Nonconformists in this Christian land, it would come about in His own good time, but it would never be hastened by unauthorised and precipitate action, and still less by the practical surrender of vital principles of Church government as embodied in the historic, or, as he preferred to define it, the apostolically-derived episcopacy. If they desired reunion they must be content to watch and wait.

We read with regret a dispatch to the London Times from Shanghai, which states that a mob of natives has attacked the English missionaries at Kieng Yung, in Fukien. The house of the Rev. Mr. Phillips was set on fire by the mob and completely destroyed. SIR,—In Mr. Bisset Thom's chatty notes upon the different months we must conceive that every one feels a genuine pleasure. We must sometimes wish that he would give the whole black-letter series, but he may have that in store for some other day. There must still be much in his wallet, and we are always willing to learn. But can Mr. Thom give any au-
