MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE,

The Committee of the Church Missionary Society have had to face the question of keeping back missionaries this coming autumn, and a large number of leading friends of the society, gathered in London from nearly every diocese in the country, have, when the facts were laid before them, agreed that the Committee's view was right. The facts are briefly these: For some years past the Society has been through lack of funds, declining grants to the Missions for things that are really necessary if their work is to be efficient; and now the Committee feel that a remedy must be applied, either by reducing the amount of work attempted or by increasing the grants of money. The problem is complicated by two other things:

the cost of living, house-rent, etc., in India, China, and elsewhere, has gone up, so that it has been quite necessary to increase the allowances of missionaries and native agents; moreover, the Indian Government has insisted on considerable expenditure on some of the Society's mission colleges and schools. The general income of the Society during the past year has been stationary, and unless there is an increase of £25,000 this year, there will be a further deficit to add to the £35,000 accumulated deficits of the past few years. Under these circumstances the Committee have felt compelled to decide only to send out missionaries who are very urgently needed this autumn, unless special and adequate contributions are guaranteed.

For the Children

Silent—but none the less eloquent—advocates of Life Insurance are your children. Protect them by the secure provision of a suitable and sufficient Life Policy.

Go further. Ensure to them, in their turn, the benefits of Insurance, by starting them early in life on the road to protection. This is best effected under such a Plan as the Young People's Policy of The Great-West Life. Very low rates are charged the Life Insurance becoming effective at age 18 at the same exceptionally low rate. There are many other advantages—not the least of which is the great encouragement such provision affords to early habits of thrift.
