

Few Cents Destroys Your Dandruff and Stops Falling Hair

Save your hair! Make it thick, wavy and beautiful—try this!

Thin, brittle, colorless and scarce hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful secret of its lustre, its strength and its life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which not remedied causes the hair to shrink, loosen and die—then hair falls out fast. A little Dandruff—now—any time—will save your hair.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Dandruff from any drug store or counter, and after the first application your hair will take on the life, lustre and luxuriance which is beautiful. It will become wavy, fluffy and have the appearance of abundance, an incomparable softness; but what will give you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually have a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair growing all over the scalp.

tion of Germany. It annihilated one squadron left to her outside North Sea, and it removed a formidable menace to our trade routes. In December 3 the Dresden and Karlsruhe were the sole enemy cruisers left at large, for the British never very fortunate in her efforts seemed to have temporarily disappeared. These, with the armored merchantmen, the Kronprinz Wilhelm and the Prince Eitel Friedrich, were the only privateers still at work on the high seas.

The British losses were small, considering the magnitude of the victory. The Invincible was hit by eight shells, but had no casualties. Indefatigable was hit thrice, and had man killed. The cruisers suffered more heavily. The Kent, for example, having four men killed and two wounded, and the Glasgow nine killed and four wounded. Unlike Germany at Coronel, every effort made by our ships to save life, only sign of a lost vessel was at the slightly discolored water. The wreckage floated up with the sinking of it, and boats were lowered and sailors let down the sides on lines to try to rescue the survivors who floated past. The water was cold—about 40 degrees—and pressing many of the swimmers grew numb and went under. Albatrosses attacked some of those clinging to wreckage, pecking at their eyes, forcing them to let go. Altogether we must have saved a couple hundred men, including the captain of the Gneisenau. Admiral von S. went down, with two of his sons.

An Officer's Story.
From a graphic description of action by an officer of the Kent, Commander Eric Wharton, we take extracts:

"It is near dusk now, 7.30, and have been two hours in action, comes everyone from below, casemates and turrets, to stare and rejoice, but they are all hustled away to do what can be done to save life. All our boats are filled, and none of them can be paired for an hour. We do what we can with lifeboats, and lumps of wood paid astern, but it's mighty cold. All this was beastly. There were so many of them in sight, we could do so little till our boats were patched. At last we could do one cutter and the gunner, and then life saving was no easy job."

Falkland Fight Most Decisive.

was in the galley and plunged about for twenty minutes to get one man. Altogether we got on board about a dozen, five of whom were really 'goners' when we hoisted them on board. The other seven have flourished and are really quite normal again now. Early in these life-saving operations the Nürnberg heeled over on her side and sank. They were a brave lot; one man stood all and held the ensign flying in his hands till the ship went under. It was strange and weird, all this aftermath, the wind rapidly rising from the westward, darkness closing in, one ship heaving to the swell well battered, the fore-top-gallant mast gone. Of the other, nothing could be seen but floating wreckage, with here and there a man clinging, and the 'Mollyhawks' (vultures of the sea) swooping by. The wind moaned, and death was in the air. Then, out of the mist loomed a great four-masted bark under full canvas. A great ghost-ship she seemed. Slowly, majestically she sailed by and vanished in the night."

Let us do honor to a gallant enemy. The German admiral fought as Craddock had fought, the German sailors died as Craddock's men had died, and there can be no higher praise. They went down with colors flying, and at the last the main mast to have lined the decks of the doomed ships. They continued to resist after their vessels had become shambles. One captured officer reported that before the end his ship had no upper deck left, every man there having been killed, and one turret blown bodily overboard by a 12-inch lyddite shell. But in all this hell of slaughter, which lasted for half a day, there was never a thought of surrender. Von Spee and his Craddock lie beneath the same waters, in the final concord of those who have looked unshaken upon death.

Another Account.

The action off Coronel, it will be remembered took place November 1st, 1914, when a squadron, under command of Rear Admiral Sir Christopher Craddock, consisting of H. M. S. Good Hope (Flag), Monmouth and Glasgow, with the armed liner Otranto, attacked the German fleet of five ships all heavily armed, under Admiral Von Spee, with the result that the two former British ships were sunk with all the crews, the Glasgow and Otranto escaping, thus leaving the whole of the South Atlantic unprotected. The situation then is thus summed up by Mr. Archibald Hurd in his book "The British Fleet in the Great War."

"In the first week of November, 1914—immediately after Coronel—Lord Fisher became First Sea Lord of the Admiralty. The victorious German ships were still at sea. The first act of that officer, exhibiting a stroke of strategic genius without parallel in British history, was to dispatch in all haste and in all secrecy the battle cruisers Invincible and Indefatigable, under command of Rear Admiral (now Admiral) Sir Doveton Sturdee from England with instructions to engage and sink the enemy. Admiral Von Spee, unaware of the approach of these vessels, steamed for the Falkland Islands, which Lord Fisher had made the rendezvous for a naval concentration, other cruisers having been ordered to join the battle cruisers there. The story of the battle is familiar. It will rank as the most decisive engagement in naval history; it excels any action in which Nelson took part, not excluding the battle of the Nile, for only one German ship escaped—the cruiser 'Dresden'—and that vessel was scuttled off the Chilean coast in the following spring after having been harried here and there by British ships. The Battle of the Falkland Islands most closely approached the Nelsonian ideal—'not victory, but annihilation.'"

"In that manner the seas were cleared of Germany's foreign service cruisers. The triumphant success with which the grand fleet held the high seas fleet in check and the annihilation of the enemy's overseas forces caused despair among the Germans; they could not get a single cruiser on to the trade routes. They had not anticipated such a vindication of British sea-power."

The League of Nations.

A United States paper points out the proposed "League of Nations" would not be the first combination of its kind. Almost eleven years ago the five republics of Central America entered into an agreement under which all differences which might arise between them were to be settled by the Central American Court of Justice, made up of one representative of each country. The league was broken up two years ago and, curiously enough, the break-up came because Nicaragua refused to abide by the decision of the court forbidding it to enter into certain treaty arrangements with the United States whose president was urging the "League of Nations" plan upon the world. To compare a "League of Nations" composed of five small countries with one made up of the great powers of the world may not be Ghosts That Spotted Murders.

One of the best known instances of a murder being made known through a ghost is that which occurred in a wood near Ellesmere in Hampshire.

The hauntings took the form of a headless man that was sometimes seen riding a horse, and at other times standing by a pool of water. On its finally being followed, it was seen to stop in a garden of a disused house, and on the soil being removed there a number of skeletons were found. These eventually were proved to be the remains of six illegitimate children who had been murdered, and the crime was brought home to their parents who suffered the extreme penalties of the law.

Another famous ghost with a similar mission was that of the man in sheepskin that used to haunt an inn in Portsmouth. The ghost appearing to a Dr. Samwell, who was putting up at the inn one night, so alarmed him that he ran out of the house and spent the interval till morning parading up and down the sea front. He told his friends who, knowing the inn well by repute, caused a search to be made, when a great number of skeletons were discovered hidden in all parts of the premises. The owner of the inn, however, had taken fright and decamped. Mr. Charley, in his well-known work on the supernatural, refers to the case of a man being tried in court suddenly confessing his guilt. The man, who was on the point of being acquitted, saw, standing upon the step of the witness box, ready to give testimony, an individual whom he at once identified as the person he had murdered. This terrified the guilty man that he at once made a clean breast of his crime.

And, coming to a more recent case Francesca Klein, the beautiful friend who murdered the old man, Sikora, in a suburb of Vienna some twelve or more years ago, is believed to have been first suspected through the terror she displayed at looking at herself in a mirror. Those who watched heard her mutter:

"It's him, come to haunt me till eternity."

They were so struck by her words as well as with the infinite fear she manifested, that they grew suspicious and informed the police, who eventually arrested her.
