Shannahan and Tucker at the House.

Some folks go on a visit to the States, or to the other side, see strange and interesting sights, return, and keep it all to themselves. The poor creatures like Shannahan and Tucker who never get, or never expect a trip of this sort, would welcome an account of the wanderings of their more fortunate fellows, but mum is the word. Perhaps 'tis well, for when they do start out to tell us anything, they usually make it so long winded that to read it would bring water to our eyes and hurt our feelings. Unlike our monied friends, Shannahan and Tucker like to tell the common people what we see and what we hear, and having visited the People's House we will tell those, who could not gain admission, what we saw, and reveal the impressions that the scene made upon us. First and foremost we would say that the architect who planned the seating capacity of the House must have thought that the House would never become popular. For if he tried to make it uninviting he certainly did his work well. The seats are as hard as flint, in the gallery. Knotty and rough, you undergo special penance which you can offer up in atonement for the sins of the past. Stern looking door keepers are on the watch, and give you the idea that you must keep as quiet as a mouse in a bale of oakum, or you will be cast out to undergo the tortures of a brisk northeaster. Tucker and myself got in by the skin of our teeth, and were soon sandwiched between a very important looking man on our left, and one of the "bone and sinew," on our right. The important man was evidently too well off to talk to us, but the "bone and sinew" fellow was worse, for he'd talk you to death. Tucker kept him going and he spoke of the olden days, when men in the Assembly dressed themselves in long black coats, standing collars, and black bows. Compared with the style of the members to-day, they were indeed dandies. But had they any more brains? The bone and sinew acquaintance of ours claimed they had, but Tucker expressed doubts on that point. The Leader of the Opposition had the floor and seemed bound to hold it. He gave a very graphic description of trawling, which was indeed a treat, but we longed for a squabble. The House is like a wake, without a wordy war. The Government members read papers, wrote letters and drew out houses and ships and other things, but seemed to have no interest in what was being said by the leader of the opposing forces. Now and again one of them would cock his ears, but realizing that there was no fear of "her going ashore," would resume his drawings with renewed vigour. Now and again one of the members would notice an important man out among the crowd, rise from his seat, approach him very important like, and invite him to a soft cushion seat inside the Bar. Oh how we envied that man. Why should this practice be in vogue? Why discriminate? Our old friend, Mr. Robt. Walsh, looked fine. Governments may come, and Governments may go, but Robert goes on, like Tennyson's brooks, for ever. The members all had glasses of water placed before them, but they remained undisturbed. Tucker says, they don't take to the water as early in the Spring as the whitecoats do. That's enough just now. We'll tell you more later on, for we are going up again.

South Coast Fishery.

A report to the Board of Trade gives the catch of codfish between Red Island and Rencontre, District of Burgeo and LaPolla as 2000 qts. for 60 dories, skiffs and boats. Herring is reported as plentiful, and there is a good sign of cod on the grounds, but weather conditions hamper operations. The winter and spring fishery is little better than half what it was last year.
