

Hon. Mr. Justice Kelly University Governor

STARTLED BY EXPOSURES.

The curtain has just been slightly drawn in a civil case before Mr. Justice Kelly. One of the many Soviet subsidiaries "bared into" a Canadian loyalist association, got possession of their buildings and real estate and turned the Canadians out. They appealed to W. A. Dowler, K.C., who brought an action for recovery. He brought out just enough evidence to make his case, but that little caused Mr. Justice Kelly to say in part:

"That there has been revealed in the course of this trial a condition of things which I venture to think has never been presented in any court in this province, certainly not within my knowledge—a condition that shows that there have been dealings on the part of certain persons in this province of a kind which I hesitate to adequately characterize. No matter what may be the legal effect of what these defendants have done, I cannot but think that the occurrences which brought about this action were the result of intrigue and design. Whether they have succeeded in carrying through these designs in such a manner as to keep within their legal rights remains to be determined, and that will be determined without feeling and impartiality."

"I confess that to me, sitting as I have sat during the course of this trial, it has been no little strain to have suppressed one's feelings when one considers the probable effect of the conduct and actions of the defendants and of those with whom they have been associated in a promulgation of their objectionable and dangerous doctrines. Canadian born as I am, and loving my country and soliciting for its welfare, I feel that the conduct of these to whom I have referred is intended to injure or destroy the birthright of our Canadian people. Of that I may have more to say at another time."

"It has been suggested during the argument that if these defendants had done wrong the criminal courts should have been appealed to. That may be so, but it is not for me to base upon now. I am dealing here only with the civil aspect of the matter."

"It may be that I may consider it my duty to draw the attention of the criminal authorities to what the record of this trial reveals, but in the disposal of this civil action I shall not be affected by any such considerations. I deem myself quite capable of disposing of it on its merits, dispassionately, calmly and impartially. I do not know if any of these defendants are, or have been, a court during the trial. They have not appeared in the witness box, but if they, or those associated with them, are here, I wish them to hear the warning of one who is charged with the duty of administering justice and to that extent maintaining law and order in this province; that they take heed and desist from a course, which evidently aims at the overthrow of constituted authority, receive judgment and I shall, before announcing my decision, review every aspect of this remarkable case, realizing that it is of extreme importance that right shall be done, not only as between the parties under these unusual circumstances, but also in the public interest."—Financial Post.

ADOPTION.

"Is so easy to find excuses," she said, "and it's now too late; I have made of our purse but tawdry uses."

No children run at our gate. There was a child that we could have taken. Lovely and sweet and pure. It always by doubt was our cottage shaken.

Never the way seemed sure. Childless, we hungered for baby laughter—

Adopt one, the neighbors said, "Always the thought of what might come after."

Could have done it, and now we know it. Only and old we stay. Only and old and our faces show it. The might have been here to-day.

Is so easy to find excuses! We found them, the small and great. Have made of our years but tawdry uses. No children run at our gate."

Paying for the Wheat Pool

The opinion of a Western large-scale farm operator, who this year marketed one hundred cars of wheat, regarding the wheat pool experiment is that it is merely adding one additional operation to the marketing machinery, and increasing the cost of a cent a bushel, without providing material benefits. And as three-quarters of a cent a bushel is not added to the price to the consumer he figures that eventually it must be deducted from the price to the producer.

This bears out the opinion of The Financial Post that there can be no benefits from a change in the marketing system unless the costs between the producer and the consumer can be reduced thereby. Efforts to boost the price of wheat to the consumer must in the long run prove futile. The justification for the pool experiment then was the hope that the cost of marketing might be reduced. If the result is that the cost is merely increased through the establishment of an additional handler of the product who turns it over to the elevators without performing any real service, the producer will be the loser to just that extent.

The price to the consumer is ruled by world conditions. All wheat-producing countries compete. Even if it were possible to pool all the wheat in the world the raising of the price would automatically reduce consumption. Carrying wheat from one season to another would merely increase the costs between producer and consumer by the storage and interest charges and it is evident that the farmer rather than the latter would have to bear this in the long run.

All efforts to reduce the costs of marketing, co-operative or otherwise, are to be encouraged. Anything that will increase the profits of the farmer will benefit the whole community. But the success of the co-operative efforts of the California fruit growers in organizing a new industry for an unsupplied market should not be confused with an experiment in changing a wheat marketing machine which has been rendered highly efficient through generations of development.—Financial Post.

The Quarter

I am twenty-five cents.
I am not on speaking terms with the butcher.
I am too small to buy a quart of ice cream.
I am not large enough to purchase a box of candy.
I cannot be exchanged for a gallon of gasoline.
I am too small to buy a ticket to a movie.
I am hardly fit for a tip. But believe me
When I go to Church on Sunday I am considered SOME MONEY.
