The Seventh Battalion had their first route march of the season last evening and turned out well. They left the drill shed shortly after Socieck and paraded for an hour along the principal streets. They Want Him Another Year. At the May meeting of the official Board of London West Methodist Church held last evening, the following resolution was moved by Bro. Wm. Gibson, and seconded by Bro. J. D. Saunby, and carried unanimously: "That we, the members of the London West Methodist Church Quarterly Official Roard desires to take advances of Official Board, desire to take advantage of Official Board, desire to take advantage of this opportunity to express our hearty appreciation of the services of our pastor, Rev. H. Godwin, among us during the past year. His faithfulness and earnestness in the work of God we have not failed to notice. By his earnest efforts, his kind and Christian bearing, and above all his great desire to see souls saved, he has in one short year endeared himself to the hearts of short year endeared himself to the hearts of his people. During the year God has been with us in his saving and sanctifying power, believers have been strengthened, souls have been saved, and as we to-night take a retrospect we can say, "Thou crowness the year with thy goodness." We would also as a board take advantage of this op-portunity to extend to Ero Godwin a very portunity to extend to Bro. Godwin a vertion including kalsomining, painting and frescocing. Meanwhile the main auditorium is closed, services being held in the lecture room. It is expected that the work of redecorating will be completed before the last Sunday in the month.

THE HORSEMAN.

It is appalling, says an exchange, the opinion man has of himself, judging from the written evidences of ability to control sex, by certain parties who subscribe themselves anything but the name their parents gave them. When one obtains a fair conception of the principles of generation then the idea will begin to expand that sex is a matter of chance far beyond the control of human agencies: human agencies:

The earlier the training of a colt is commenced the better, but he should not be put to hard labor till his bones are well solidified. The heads and shatts of the solidined. The heads and shatts of the long bones are united only by cartilages, which do not ossify or harden into bone till the horse is about 5 years old. Before that time heavy work or hard straining is likely to produce unsoundness and deformity of the joints.

the majority of instances, we may charge the multitude of defects and diseases that attach themselves to the equine body. It is well to remember that inheritance for good or evil has its source of strength in repetition. If the growing prevalence of hereditary diseases is to be checked, a refusal to patronize any horse or use any mare so afflicted is demanded of all. More important still, do not breed from animals that have the conformation that gives use to these diseases. Type is undoubtedly one of the most hereditary fixtures of animal life. The narrow kuee, the straight pastern, the hock with weak foundation and little breath, is more to be shunned than the disease given birth to by them. A horse may be spavined and yet be fit for breeding purposes, provided the hock is constructed on right principles. On a properly built hock such a disease could only originate through a severe accident.

An authority on horsebreeding says: "A good roadster should have a fine muzzle, a wide, expansive nostril, a deep mouth, a full, round eye, broad forehead and thin cars, a finely-tapered neck, well cut up at the jaw, deep and muscular at the shoulders, moderately high withers, deep chest, not too wide between the forelegs or projecting too much forward of them, large, muscular arms, wide, flank knees, tendons tying in but little behind the cannon bone, pasterns short, hoofs round and sound, forelegs set on well forward so as to support no more than their due proportion of the weight of the body, hips broad to afford leverage for the muscles of the loins, barrel round and capacious, thighs well developed and wide enough in front that the stifle may clear the flank in progression, bock long, gambrel joint wide from before in front, to the point of the hock, and above all he should possess an amiable disposition, courageous and free without being freful. An authority on horsebreeding says: "A

It is not to be wondered at how the Californians worship water. The Arab maxim, "A man is not a man until he has pitched a tent, dug a well and begotten a boy," might be paraphrased here, "A man is only a man when he bores a well, dams a gulch and fills a flowing ditch." With water all things are possible to this slope. Without it much of the country would be a desert. The scanty soil of Arisona is very rich in productive ingredients. It is dried up earth fat. Pour water here upon the bozom of mother earth where she turns it up to be kissed by Old Sol and her nourishment will be poured out without stint. Withold water and her breasts are as dry as those of an Egyptian mummy.
