London Teachers Conclude Interesting Course, Demonstrating Value of Music As First Aid To School Work.

of music in the schools. Miss Skilling and Miss McKee have given to local educators a revelation with regard to the manner in which music may be related to school studles in a natural, logical way, without lum. In doing so they have demonstrated beyond contradiction the music box and records as an aid in teaching reading, history, geography, rithmetic, even writing, as well as making interesting physical drill. Not Just Fad.

"This isn't a mere fad," said Miss McKee very earnestly. "Everything we do and suggest is based on sound pedagogic principles and is applicable to the smallest country school as well as the most elaborately equipped city school. The work we suggest pro-motes concentration and discrimination, trains memory and stimulates imagination. Aren't these four things most essential to making the, most of education and of life?

When assent was given, Miss McKee continued, "both Miss Skilling and I have had experience in teaching in country as well as city school which stands us in very good stead.
We have also had a musical background. Miss Skilling conducted the Perth Avenue School choir while teaching in that school in Toronto, and under her leadership it came to be recognized as the finest school oir in Toronto. I am an associate of the Toronto Conservatory of Mu-sic, so we appreciate the side of the public school teacher just as we do the musical. It was our experience with music as teachers which led us into the work we are now doing. "History becomes vivid and real

"Would a war march of an Egyptian priest explain angular elbow writing which looks like a parade from Tut's tomb? And were certain worthy Anglo-Saxons or Celts born with a foreign Chinese rhythm, which, uncorrected, led them ever after to make signs for all the world like hieroglyphics?"

Miss McKee wasn't prepared to say on short notice, but the thing she is trying to promote with musical aid is clear thinking, retentive memory, harmony of mind and body, and decision and grace in action.

The wind-up program last evening in Victoria School, in which an exceptionally large audience partici-pated, included a musical memory contest. The "class" was asked to write down on paper the names of a dozen or so classics played on the ograph, such as Handel's "Lar-"Ase's Death" and "Anitra's Dance" (Greig), and an etude by Behr, the ideal musical express of "The Elves and the Shoemaker'
