THURSDAY MORNING, JAN, 16, 1890.

The Session at Ottawa.

During the earlier part of 1889, it appeared to be the prevailing expectation that the session of Parliament which opens at Ottawa to-day would be remarkable chiefly as one of debates and disputes over the Commercial Union agitation and questions therewith connected. Later on the impression appeared to to gain that the question of Equal Rights and others provoked by the passing of the Jesuits' Estates Act would come to the front for public attention, and that, instead of the commercial or economical issue, race and religious issues would take first place among subjects of parliamentary talk. Up to the very latest, however, still another change in public expectations' made by The Globs as to The Mail's alleged attempt to damage Unrestricted.
