Some Unique Arrangements.

The operating-room is fitted up with the graphic room. To many this may seem an unnecessary adjunct to the equipment of a hospital. Such, however, is not the case. All examples of deformity are photographed on the patients' admission; a register is kept of operations performed, and the progress of the case is noted by the unerring record of the photograph.

Another equipment is notable. There are no less than nine telephones in the building and one in the annex. Electric bells, too, are in every ward communicating with Miss Cody, the lady-superintendent's room.

There is an abundant supply of water in every part of the house. Protection from fire has been a primary consideration, and there is a good supply of hose. Another thoughtful arrangement is the placing of Though a great improvement on the pre

Plans were prepared for the new Lakeside Home in the wrinter of 1890, and in the spring of the present year the contracts were let. As it stands to-day the building is a perfect sanitarium for sick children and will accommodate with ease 200 children. The new building covers six times the floor space of the hold building, and while one bathroom sufficed for the inmates previously, there are no less than nine telephones in the building are not expected. The week provided that many more of Toronto's wealthy citizens would emulate such example—'do good by steath and blush to find it fame!'
