Here are sixty little children, many of them wearing clothes not only soiled, but filled with the mingled odors of their poor homes, and their bodies, perhaps, never thoroughly bathed since their babyhood. What a volume of pure air it must take to replace that poisoned by the impurities thrown off not only by such bodies, but by sixty pairs of lunga! One large school house in Boston, Chauncy Hall, justly claims to be thoroughly ventilated, but this result is accomplished at such a large expense that we cannot expect the system to be employed in the public schools. A celebrated writer on sanitary subjects, is quoted in the Journal of Education as saying that children ought never to be kept through an entire seasion in one room; ter on sanitary subjects, is quoted in the Journal of Education as saying that children ought never to be kept through an entire seasion in one room; the sir becomes in a short time unfit to breathe.
