from the Tees show every prospect of continuous improvement. As yet, however, there has been no increase in the demand for home consumption, and the iron works have no more than a normal quantity of orders on hand. Until the home trade improves, the present firm tone in the pig iron market cannot be regarded with entire confidence.

Thursday was a very unfavorable day for a sale, the wet literally coming down in bucket-fuls, and those who had not previously taken a trip down to the docks to inspect the parcels they contemplated buying would have to rely entirely on the brokers' sale report. The seats were fairly well occupied, and from the appearance of the room pretty active proceedings might have been expected. The fact was, however, that the wet, which continued throughout the day drove many into the saleroom who would otherwise have patronized the approaches.

Prices throughout were not very tippy, but the major portion of the goods submitted without reserve had nothing specially choice about them. For the pine boards ex Baumwall there was some good bidding though the prices realized read low. The classification of the 1st Ottawa pine was not very strict, and they fetched about 2nd quality price. For the Mon-treau pine ex Suffolk the competition was not over brisk. The first lot of this parcel some 2x12 to 16 in. 2nd bright, hung at £9 10s., advancing by slow degrees to £11, at which they dwelt for some time, being eventually knocked down at this price. The 2x10 also experienced similar treatment, but fell at 5s., on the opening bid, the room evidently not being very anxious about them.

The battens from this port were very unfavorably treated; 2nd bright pine of any dimensions must be considered extraordinarily cheap under £9 if the quality is anything like the usual mill assorting.

Some there were who inclined to the idea that the elections, from the quiet way they are now conducted would have no influence on trade one way or the other, but we do not share that view. As far as the indications in the saleroom went, they pointed to a very serious influence being exercised by the political contest now going on, and considerable excitement was engendered by the cheering from the adjacent Baltic which rang through the building at intervals as the tape brought intelligence of the result of the metropolitan elections.
