

A CHINESE BARROWMAN.

Look at him, with his intense earnest look, as though his whole soul as well as body were in the work, as, with a sail to help him, he dashes along. Remember this picture, and you will be able the better to understand the letters from our missionaries when they tell us about going out on their journeys, sometimes for many days, preaching among the villages, towns, and cities of China, taking with them a barrowman to carry food, clothing, tracts, books, etc.

The barrow is also often used for a carriage, but its horse does not always trot or run as this one is doing. As horses with us, sometimes trot, sometimes walk, so do the barrowmen in China.
