

Sir Arthur Currie.

P.3.

well as in any other line of work. Broadly-speaking, however, I think that the instinct of our graduates is fairly sound in this respect. I do not know why more Queen's men apply, but it has been suggested to me that a larger proportion of them may come from surroundings in which a Government position and the salaries attached seem more attractive than they do to the bulk of our graduates. This, however, is merely a theory.

We always direct the attention of graduates who are on our list as unemployed to Government positions, but with the response as limited as it is, it hardly seems worth while to go further than we are already doing.

Of course the above remarks and considerations do not apply to the employees under certain Government Commissions, or to the Canadian National Railway. We have a number of graduates in the latter organization who are in excellent positions, such as Bond, Brookes, Needham, Henry and several others.

Yours faithfully,

H. M. Mackay

Dean.