The Scottish Church made overtures of friendship towards the Dutch Synod of the Transvaal which were contemptuously spurned.

Although the British arranged for the study of the Dutch as well as English language in the schools alike as much as they had before the war, yet the Dutch predikants insisted on separate schools, and thus obstructed the most efficient means of bringing the two races into friendly relations.

Miss Graham has great hopes for the future of this great country. Co-operative farming and irrigation, which are being largely adopted, will work wonders on the brown veldt.

Many of the Canadian contingent returned home at the end of their year's engagement, a considerable number of them married in South Africa. Miss Graham and several others remained for nearly two years, then returned to their beloved Canada. This book is one of the most illuminative and instructive that we have read on the South African problem. It abounds in vivacious sketches of the humors of school life on the brown veldt with very inadequate material. Some charts and Sunday-school colored pictures, furnished by our own Dr. Briggs, were highly appreciated.

The difficulties experienced with the Dutch language were very amusing. The
