

And the velvet peach in its swaying nest fills the gardener with delight.
She can pluck, if she will, at Yuletide, in the balmy air,
the rose,
And the people smile when they hear her called "Our Lady of the Snows."

The wire that brought that message on lightning under the sea
Had been too short to bear it to her furthest boundary.
Not by a flippant phrasing of catchword verse or prose,
Can the truth be told of the vast domain of "Our Lady of the Snows." —ARTHUR WEIR, in "Montreal Star."

Canadian Products.

BESIDES an immense Export trade in Flour, Cheese, Butter, Eggs, and Canned Fish, all of which are well-known in England, Canada grows a large quantity of Fruit. Canadian Apples are now very much appreciated, and her Peaches, Plums, Pears, and Berries are equally nice. Not only so, but a large trade is now being done in Canned Tomatoes, Peas, French Beans, and other vegetables —indeed, there seems no limit to the possibilities of development in this direction. Canadian Beef, Mutton, Bacon, Hams, and Poultry are so like English, being fed as on our own English farms, that very few know the difference. And why should they care? Are not our Canadian brothers as British as we are, and their produce equal to our own?
