In view of the president's endorsation of the idea, there is little doubt but that the suggestion will be acted upon by the society. It may be that the debates will be conducted upon "Old Lit" and "Unionist" party lines. since Dr. Falconer has expressed his opinion on the matter, but that will be settled by the society when it deals

Mr. Rowell's Address. Mr. Rowell's address was well received by the students. His native loyalty to Canadian institutions and strong imperialistic ideas made him particularly well qualified to speak on an imperial subject. While his remarks were mainly of an instructive and strongly patriotic nature, when touching on the question of imperial defence he pronounced political opinion. He had told of Australia's attitude in 1887, of assisting by contri-bution, and of her withdrawal from it years later, when she committed herself to an Australian navy. Later in the conference of 1911 Great Britain. Australia and Canada settled upon a definite plan of naval defence for the two self-governing nations. Canada undertook then to protect herself along the two great sea highways, the western North Atlantic and eastern

"Great Britain now looks to Canada to establish this scheme of defence, said Mr. Rowell, and the students applauded the statement.

Canadian Autonomy tracing the development of Canadian autonomy since the birth of this try, the speaker emphisized the point that every enlargement of our autonomy has been characterized by increased expressions of affection and loyalty to England. Can'da's experience in this regard is conceded by authorities to be the corner-stone upon which the imperial fabric rests today. Mr. Rowell laid stress upon the fact that imperialism as it is to be interpreted to Canadians, does not mean co operation of colonies or governments in
