The attempt to assassinate Colonel Roosevelt has no political significance. That the would-be assassin is mentally unbalanced is quite evident. That the would-be assassin is mentally unbalanced is quite evident from what he said. Colonel Roosevelt is nothing if not obstinate, and though a bullet had been lodged in his body he insisted on delivering a speech more than an hour in length before he would permit the physicians to examine his wound. "I will make this speech or die," he is said to have declared. That was a very foolhardy remark entirely uncalled for under the circumstances.
