Hon. J. Douglas Hazen Makes Important Address in House of Commons — Found Canadians Cheerful at the Front and in Hospitals and a Credit to Canada.

Ottawa, May 19.—After dealing with the submarine question and the necessity of shipbuilding, Hon. Mr. Hazen in the house last night completely controverted the stories of the misbehaviour of Canadian soldiers in England and went off. "The Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) referred to a visit we had made to France and to the Canadian lines there, where we saw the work carried on at the Canadian headquarters and the British headquarters. He referred to the wonderful work being done by the Canadian construction corps under the command of General "Jack" Stewart, a member of the firm, Foley, Welch & Stewart. The Prime Minister told the house of the railway line, Stewart built in four days, which the army engineers said would take six weeks to build. Complete destruction.

"We travelled over a district where the battle had been raging, and where every foot of land for miles and miles had been utterly torn to pieces, where villages had been wiped out so that not a stone was left standing. We travelled over that railway, and it was explained by the British officers that wonderful work had been done in the construction of those railways and what splendid service the construction corps from Canada had rendered the cause for which we were fighting.

"One cannot help being impressed with the wonderful cheerfulness of the men at the front, their wonderful physique and the wonderful work they are doing. I never met a man in the trenches who had a complaint about anything. They were trying to do their duty for the honor of the Empire and of Canada.

Wounded Men Cheerful.

"I went to some of the various hospitals to inquire for our Canadian soldiers, and I think I must have talked to thousands of them. I found the same spirit of cheerfulness prevailing. As far as I could judge from my own observations, and from the statements made to me by the men in the hospitals, the Canadian hospital service is one that is a credit to the people of this country and to our Canadian friends at the front should have the satisfaction of knowing that these friends will receive in our different hospitals the very best of treatment. All these hospitals are equipped with operating rooms, X-ray apparatus, with all the modern as well as can be found in the best hospitals in Canada. The best of Canadian surgeons and doctors are there, and the best of Canadian nurses. And all over the land in England are found the women of Canada in the hospitals, ministering to the wants of our soldiers who, unfortunately, have been wounded.

Sons of M. P.'s Wounded.

"Let me tell a little story illustrating the spirit of the Canadian boys at the front. One night, about ten o'clock, after I had returned from a visit to the military camp at Shoreham, I found a cable from a member of this house, telling me that he had information that his son had been wounded, and asking me if I could ascertain where he was, and what was his condition. It was just after the battle of Vimy Ridge, and many wounded were being brought across the Channel. I at once inquired by telephone among the different hospitals, and at length I found that this young man was in the first London General Hospital, and the information I was given was that he had received a flesh wound in the leg, that his condition was not serious, and that he was getting along very well. I wired this information to his father and the next morning, being Sunday, I went to the hospital to inquire, and a more cheerful boy I never saw. Lying in the bed next to his was the brother of a member of the house, a boy serving for Centre York (Mr. Wallace) wounded, but I am glad to say, not seriously. And lying in the adjoining

Sons at the Front.

"Many members of this house have sons at the front. I think that every man who has a son of military age has that son serving at the front. Some have unfortunately lost their sons in the war. The Prime Minister referred to the fact that arrangements had been made to keep the graves in which the Canadian soldiers are buried would be kept in proper condition for perpetuity at the expense of the British government, and the governments of the overseas dominions, through the agency of a commission of which the Prince of Wales is chairman. That, I have no doubt, is gratifying to most of all the members of my self.

"When I was in France I visited the graveyard in which I have very great personal interest. Lying side by side with my own dear boy I saw the names of other Canadians—of General Mercer's son, of the late General Veniot, and the names of other prominent Canadian soldiers keeping their last sleep. And extremely satisfying it was to me to see in which the graveyard was kept and observing the evidences that the loving hands of comrades and relatives of men, who had given up their lives, had done everything that could be done to mark their last resting place what their relatives and friends overseas would desire to have it.

Feeling of Sacrifice.

"Although the Canadian forces on every front, I think that feeling of comradeship, that feeling of affection one for another, that feeling of sacrifice and I felt as I looked over towards the Ridge from Mount St. Eloi and was told of the time four Canadian divisions would be lined against it, it would be little less than a crime if we in Canada did not see that these divisions were repelled. That all wastage was made good and that men would be kept going from Canada to sustain and strengthen the armament of our Allies who were fighting for our cause over there so valiantly. Whilst at the outset of the war I thought that the effect of men volunteers, especially coming forward to serve their King and country without any compensation, I thought it would be kept going from Canada to sustain and strengthen the armament of our Allies who were fighting for our cause over there so valiantly.
