Cattle Poisoning

Care should be exercised in using insecticides upon living animals by ascertain whether or not they contain substances which would be injurious if taken into the stomach. Quite recently there was a reported outbreak of disease among cattle in the County of Adair. Upon an investigation being made by Dr. Higginson, Dominion V.S., it was ascertained that the farmers had been using some poisonous powder upon the animals to destroy vermin. This had been licked off by the cattle with very injurious results.

A perfectly safe and efficacious powder which may be used to destroy vermin upon domestic animals is composed of 1 lb. arsenic powder and 4 lbs. of kerosene mix these together and pull it over the affected animals and about the building in which they are housed. Do this liberally every evening for a week if the animals are infested and afterwards, say once a week, as a preventive. This powder is not only quite harmless to all warm blooded animals but it is also a useful insecticide as well as an insecticide.
