After the address delivered by Mr. Jones, the following, were put on the stand, Prof. Andrews of Sackville Thos. Solicitor General Jones in opening for the Crown said that the matter before the jury was one of the most important cases that could possibly come before them. The prisoner at the bar was charged with the murder of Mary Ann McAuley on August 20th last, in the parish of Harvey. That it was a murder and a most atrocious one there was no doubt as would be shown by evidence. The evidence against the prisoner would be of circumstantial character, no one having seen the fatal blow struck, murderers generally wishing secrecy to the committal of their terrible crimes. The solicitor general described the topography of the New Ireland section and gave minute details of the facts so far as known of Miss McAuley's death at the time when Father McAuley was absent from nome and relating very fully the particulars of the hiring by the priest of Thomas Collins, the prisoner, and of the murder. The matter of the missing axe beonging to Father McAuley was referred to; the fishing trip made by the prisoner, Miss McAuley and others, and their return on the Sunday evening before the murder.

Particular mention was made of Collins' movements on the Monday followthe Harbells, John Long and others, carrying two valises in the vicinity of the priest's residence and his subsequent actions as he left these men and finally reached Elgin, where he was seen by Father McAuley. Collins' conflicting stories were also dealt with HOPEWELL CAPE, June 26-The Col- and the finding in his possession of arlins trial was resumed at ten o'clock ticles belonging to Father McAuley this morning. Immediately after the and also a gold watch similar to one opening of the court, Solicitor General owned by Miss McAuley and which has

Mr. Jones also gave briefly the gruesome details of the finding of the body of the murdered woman, describing the terrible wounds that caused her death. During the greater part of the address the prisoner looked on calmly, his head thrown back and resting on his hand, but in spite of his outward calmness, there was evidence of the terrible neryous strain which he was apparently undergoing and at times he showed positive uneasiness. During the relation of the story of the finding of the axe the prisoner showed considerable agitation, moving about in his chair uneasily, his face flushing perceptibly.

The solicitor general occupied an hour and a half, the presentment of the case being particularly full and clear. At the conclusion of the solicitor's address his honor explained to the jury that the prisoner at the bar had been indicted for the offense and had leaded not guilty. The crown called M. B.
