Divorced Life

By Helen Hessong Fuestle

The Manager's Attention

The week of rehearsal was drawing to a close, and Marian was submitting to the grind with satisfaction. Already she had bought her make-up requirements and selected from her wardrobe the costume she expected to wear for the opening performance on the following Monday night. She was beginning to feel as though she had always belonged to the people of the stage.

For several days she had seen practically nothing of Ratenhauer, the manager. One day he bobbed up, toward the close of the rehearsal, shook hands cordially with her, and asked her to step into his office with him for a moment. With a feeling that he might be on the point of offering her a good contract, she followed him into the cozy office, located at the back of the box office. It was a comfortable room, with its desk, chairs, couch, softly carpeted floor, and its profusion of actors' and actresses' pictures, all autographed and inscribed to the manager, on the walls.

"Wittree says you're doing good work," began Ratenhauer, when they were seated. "How do you like it, by this time?"

"I like it better every day," returned Marian, flushing with pride at the compliment.

"Glad to hear you say so. I haven't forgotten what I told you, little girl. I'm going to make an actress out of you. There's no limit to the extent you can go. It's all up to you."

"I shall certainly do my very best."

"I'll see that the rough places are smoothed out for you. That's what I'm here for." He looked at her steadily through narrowed eyelids. "I'll have my press agent work up a good publicity campaign for you. Bring me some good pictures of yourself to-morrow. Don't forget." He turned to his desk, and picked out some typewritten sheets, handing them to Marian. "Here's the opening gun in the publicity campaign. We'll flash this to-morrow morning. Then we'll swing in with some crackerjack follow-up stuff."

Marian's eyes ran dazedly down the typewritten page. Whoever had written it, had thrown together a weird skein of wholly imaginative matter.

Prisoner Convicted

OF THEFTS—GOT 12 MONTHS—
SENSATION AT POLICE COURT.
While being tried yesterday for a series of larcenies and burglaries committed, prisoner White, in an earnest but unsuccessful attempt to put up a lunacy plea, got erratic as he stood to the bar and repeatedly interrupted and back-answered Judge Knight and Inspector General Sullivan, who conducted the case for the prosecution. The prisoner had been coming, so he said, from Novis' Arm to his home in Conception Harbor. He decided to travel the journey by foot. He beat his way along the railway line, broke into every house and building that he saw. On each occasion he stole all and sundry that he could lay hands on, and even removed a letter box from LaManche crossing, and was tired of terrorizing children and members of the sterner sex. Altogether the amount of stuff taken by White, would be enough to start a dry goods store, but with half of what he stole started fires, which happenings caused section men along the line to suspect that the traveller was a maniac and this is what led to the capture and arrest of White. Yesterday it was learned from the evidence of witnesses that White posed under several different names and belonged to various places, this

If you expect to succeed in the theatrical work, you've got to have yourself thrown into the public eye.

"Don't you dare to use it!" I don't propose to be made a fool and an idiot off. I'm not here for that purpose!" "Tut, tut," said the manager soothingly. "If you insist on it, we'll hold the press campaign up for a while, until we can get a picture of you. Then we'll frame up something that will suit you. But we've got to advertise you." At this point, he reached for her hand as he had done on a former occasion, and swiftly kissed it.

"Don't do that," she objected, pulling her hand away.

"I love you, sweetheart. I'm going to steal you," he answered, seizing her and drawing her to him.

Try Again.

You have, it may be, used ointments, pastes, lotions for Eczema till you begin to get tired of trying things. Well, but you should remember that science is advancing all the time, and that what was not possible yesterday can be accomplished to-day. If you neglect to try Zylex—the newest and best thing that science has yet to offer for the relief and cure of Eczema and other annoying and disfiguring skin diseases—you are missing a great opportunity. It may be that it will cure you. It has cured some very bad cases. Price 50c. a box. Zylex Soap, 25c. a cake.

TOURIST TRAFFIC.—About twenty round trippers, the second contingent for the season, came by the S. S. Stephano yesterday.
