Any enterprise which will help to relieve the industrial situation in Newfoundland, provided it is undertaken by an individual or a corporation whose financial reputation is beyond question, is certain of general support. In 1921 the depression in trade was keenly felt and means had to be devised to provide many with the bare necessities of life. A measure was passed entitled An Act Respecting the Exportation of Timber, and repealing previous statutes which had wisely prohibited the exportation of pulp wood. Under the Act it is lawful for five years from August 2nd, 1921 "to export to Great Britain and Canada round timber rossed or barked" and "the Governor-in-Council whenever he deems it expedient may permit the export of round timber to the United States of America." The Act in the first instance limited the cutting of the ler's Department as the outcome of late Rev. he requires, and it will prove the last straw. He will either have to turn his activities in another direction, leave the country or starve.

Canada to-day views with alarm the inroads that are being made on her forests, and the industrial losses that she is sustaining by permitting pulp wood to be exported to the United States. She has now under consideration the placing of an embargo on such exports, and except in certain quarters where personal interests are considered parameunt, and the national welfare a matter of secondary importance, the country endorses the attitude of the Government. Our position in this respect is identical with that of Canada.

The Harmsworth and the Armstrong-Whitworth Companies by their vast investments in Newfoundland have proved to the world that our natural advantages offer unequalled opportunities for the manufacture of pulp and paper, and it is our business to help the development of this industry in every way. As long as the export of pulp wood is necessary to meet the present unusual conditions, so long and no longer should the Act referred to remain in force. Before the shipment abroad of timber on a considerable scale is permitted, somthing far more tangible than promises should be insisten upon to show clearly that the export is but a temporary measure.

Let us not be persuaded to part with our heritage for a mess of pottage.
