A FATEFUL... ...DIAMOND

But he related all that had occurred upon the night of his disappearance, and described the subsequent events. At first the directors were inclined to doubt his story; but as it progressed all suspicions of its veracity disappeared. Long before Louis had finished his narrative, one of the directors stepped forward and grasped him cordially by the hand.

"If there had been a doubt in any of our minds, it has vanished. Now, about the bird that you have captured; may we detain you here still longer while we send an officer after him, and learn what he has to say for himself?"

"Certainly; it is my wish that this affair be settled as soon as possible. But may I ask as a personal favor that you will deal leniently with him?" The gentlemen regarded Louis with astonishment as he made this request. "I will gladly make up the amount that has been taken," Louis continued, "also the interest on the whole for the time that it has been lying idle; and if it could be possible to persuade you not to arraign him for public trial—if we could settle this privately—"

"This is certainly a singular request," interrupted one of his hearers, sternly. "The man has been guilty of a two-fold crime. One would suppose, from what you have said, that he was in the habit of stealing the severest sentence that could be pronounced upon him insufficient to atone for your injuries."

"He is one of my own countrymen," urged Louis. "We were schoolmates in our youth, and the peculiar circumstances under which he has recently labored may have made the temptation greater than it would otherwise have been. He has always been accustomed to every luxury, but recently has lost both his parents, and with them a large fortune, which all his life he has expected would be his upon their death. He found himself in a strange country, without even money enough to return to his native land, except what was given to him by a friend; so you perceive he was sorely tempted."

The directors consulted together for a few moments, and grew considerably excited while discussing the matter. They did not appear to be in favor of granting the request, even if it was in their power to do so, which some of them doubted.

"We cannot decide that question now, Mr. Dunbar," one at length remarked. "But," with a smile, "there is another upon which we are all agreed—the large reward offered for the recovery of the money and the apprehension of the thief is yours."

Louis flushed deeply crimson. He had said he would not touch so much as a sou of the promised reward, and he had not intended to do so.

But after thinking deeply for a moment, he looked up with a smile, saying:

"Gentlemen, to show you how much in earnest I am regarding this matter, if you will grant my request and hush this affair as much as possible, allow my countrymen to go free—he is young, and upon this act may depend his salvation—I will cheerfully resign all claim to the reward."

"But he may do the same thing again to someone else."

"No, no!" said Louis. "We will exact a pledge from him that he will heed the lesson and strive to become an honorable man. I do not believe he will ever become a thief again."

"You are more fit to be an abbe than a business man, Monsieur Dunbar; but we cannot promise."

And Louis was obliged to let the matter rest for the present.

The policeman that he had seen outside was dispatched with one of the clerks to conduct Arthur to the office, and after consulting with Margaret a moment, Louis asked permission to send a message to Mr. Houghton, requesting his presence also.

This being granted, the party fell into social converse while waiting the appearance of Arthur.

CHAPTER XLII.

As soon as Louis and Margaret left the building after finding the gold, Arthur commenced with renewed vigor to dig away at the hole he was making in the wall.

It was astonishing to see with what energy the usually indolent, pleasure-loving young man toiled. The knife was dull, and it was slow, hard work. At last, however, he had two inches cut away, then something confronted him for which he was wholly unprepared. Behind that lath there was a solid brick wall—a fire-proof wall!

He sank down upon the floor with a groan, all hope crushed out of his heart.

He lay there in a crouching attitude for some time, then he glanced up eagerly at the other side of his prison—the rear side.

There might not be any wall upon that side.

His table stood in the corner; he sprang up and moved it out, and in doing so discovered another hole not quite the size of the one on which he had been at work.

"Ah, the diamond-worker who had owned the shop in the years gone by had seen to it that his treasures should be carefully guarded; while Louis had not, after all, been such a fool as he had at first supposed. He too, had tried to escape in the same way, and been baffled by that impassable barrier."

But what had he done with the debris?

The safe! He sprang toward it. Yes, it was half full of lime and of broken laths.

He threw himself upon his couch with an oath, that ended in a groan of despair.

Must he stay there and be run down like a rat in a trap?—be arrested like any common thief, be tried and condemned to a fate that to him would be worse than death?

His eye caught the gleam of his pocket knife, which he had thrown upon the floor after breaking it upon those tough laths, and he started, while a shiver ran through his frame. It had been very sharp, and a steady, determined stroke across an artery even with that broken blade, would place him beyond all fear of man or of the law.

Yes, all fear of man!

Then he is it? Had he courage and nerve to make that fatal stroke?

He grew faint and sick; there came a sudden shock, a strong revulsion at the thought.

A blur fell before his eyes; a ringing as of discordant bells was in his ears; a cold sweat started out upon his forehead, and his heart beat with heavy throbs.

No, he had not the nerve; for, away back in the past, when he was a little child and had knelt at his mother's knees to be taught to kiss his childish prayers, there had been instilled into his tender mind the fear of God and accountability to him.

He might succeed in escaping the bar of human justice by becoming a suicide, but he knew it would only be to find himself before the bar of God to be judged—yes, and condemned—for all eternity.

His mother had been an amiable Christian woman, and he had loved her with his whole heart. His selfish, arrogant nature would permit him to love anyone. She had been faithful to him, instructing him, as many another mother had done her boy, and teaching him to respect his mother's name, that all her life she had prayed to the God in whom she believed for him, and that with her latest breath she had spoken his name, and pleaded that she might be allowed to meet him by and bye in the upper world to which she was going.

She was gone; but, though dead, she yet seemed to speak to him, and in the awful silence of that room, where for a moment the mad thought of taking his own life had come to him, he seemed to feel her presence, while a vision of his past arose before him.

What had it amounted to?

He had lived for himself alone, for the gratification of his whims and caprices, making everything subservient to his own selfish desires.

He had plotted and intrigued from his earliest boyhood to gain his own ends; he had allowed nothing to stand in his way, if trickery, or meanness, or deceit, would avail. He had never, that he could remember, done a noble act, performed a really good deed, or denied himself for the sake of another.

He had sown the wind—was he about to reap the whirlwind?

For the first time in his life he stood face to face with his own soul, and saw it as it was, realizing how he had warped, marred and misused that God-given treasure.

Was it too late to redeem himself? He groined aloud in mental agony at the thought.

Yes, he thought it was too late, for soon the world would know him as he was, and he would be branded for all time.

Eat and Run.

There isn't a man who would be seen running through the street munching a piece of pie. Why not? Because it would mean dyspepsia and stomach trouble? Not at all; but because it wouldn't look well. As a matter of fact many a business man snatches a lunch in such a hurry that he might as well take it on the run. That is one reason for the prevailing "stomach trouble" among men of business.

There is a certain remedy for diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It is Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The worst cases of dyspepsia and catarrh of the stomach have been cured by this medicine. It cures where all other means have failed to cure.

"I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for stomach trouble," writes Clarence Carney, Esq., of Taylorstown, Louisiana, Co., Va. "It did me so much good that I didn't take any more, and can now eat most anything now. I am so well pleased with it I hardly know how to thank you. I wrote you kind information. I tried a whole lot of things before I wrote you. There was a gentleman told me about your medicine, and how it had cured his wife. I thought I would try a bottle of it. Am now glad I did, for I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness. They stimulate the sluggish liver, and cleanse the system of impurities. They should always be used with "Golden Medical Discovery" when there is need of a laxative.

time with a mark which nothing could ever efface.

Suddenly he heard a noise below! Someone was coming. Was it Louis returning, or had he sent a gendarme to arrest him?

In a few moments a key was inserted in the lock, the door was thrown open and two men entered, one of them a gendarme.

"Why are you here?" Arthur questioned, hoarsely.

"You are wanted, monsieur," was the brief reply, as the gendarme inserted his key to his prison and unlocked it, bidding him come forth and prepare to go with them, and he knew then that Louis had given him up to justice.

POLITICAL POINTS

Peculiar Tactics of the Opposit- Pointed Out.

Mr. Tarte's Challenge to Hugh John Macdonald—Sir Adolphe's Programme.

DUPLICITY OF OPPOSITION LEADERS.

Convincing proof that the Conservatives are deliberately carrying on a policy of rousing racial and religious prejudices is found in the conduct of their leaders during the present campaign in Montreal. Neither Sir Charles Tupper nor any of his colleagues questioned the loyalty of the French-Canadian leaders, but, on the contrary, at the French meeting in the Monument Nationale, Sir Charles, Hon. Hugh John Macdonald and Hon. George E. Foster took particular pains to show that they were the real friends of French-Canadians.

Mr. Foster going so far as to salute the meeting in French and afterwards to interpose a word or a phrase in French in order to arouse the sympathy of those present. Then at the French meeting the audience was French, there was not a word on these topics, nor did Sir Charles attempt to repudiate the notorious Conservative Pamphlet No. 6, but as soon as they reached a purely English section they at once opened out on the French ministers in the hope of injuring Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But their duplicity will not be allowed to go unchecked for long.

Their speeches are reported in the newspapers.

MR. TARTE'S CHALLENGE.

Saturday morning the following telegram was addressed to the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald by Hon. J. Israel Tarte, minister of public works: "I see that the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald is making a speech in French. I have said in my speeches in French. Tell him that I would be most happy to meet him before an Ontario audience and to prove to him that his accusations have no foundation. I have said in French and in English. I have said over and over again in the House of Commons. I am sorry that Mr. Macdonald is trying to set race against race. Why did he not accuse me in Quebec, as he does in Ontario? (Signed) J. Israel Tarte."

CARON IS A FIGHTER.

Although Sir Charles Tupper had selected Sir Adolphe Caron as leader for the district of Three Rivers, which he at present represents in the House, local influences have proved too strong.

Trifling of Three Rivers repudiates Sir Adolphe and insists upon a local man. Sir Adolphe addressed the people at the exhibition there last week and tried hard to retain the constituency, but found that he could not. He has now decided to leave Three Rivers and run in Bonaventure.

Mr. C. N. Armstrong, of Bale de Chaleurs Railway fame, has a good deal of influence still in that country, and last week Mr. Armstrong, a New Carlisle lawyer, who had designs on the county, to visit Quebec and consult Sir Adolphe about the matter. It is altogether likely that Sir Adolphe will find a constituency in spite of the efforts of Mr. Tarte and the new organization to keep him out, for whatever his feelings are he is a fighter.

TO SELL CHICKENS AT A PROFIT

An Open Letter From Mr. Gilbert of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, to the Recognized Poultry Authority of Canada.

The farmers throughout Ontario have not as yet recognized the importance and value to themselves of a great central station, where they can send their chickens at any season of the year, and where they would get a fair price (which they would know before shipping). There is, beyond a doubt, a great deal of money to be made out of chickens—that is to say, to be made out of the right kind of chickens, such, for instance, as Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, and some of the crosses, for the larger birds are certainly the most in demand when sold for food, and more especially so when sent to a great fattening concern like the Canadian Produce Company, of Christie street, Toronto. This firm fattens the chickens and puts them in shape for exporting to the British market, where a large bird is in demand.

Canadian Produce Company have agreed to send single crates to any farmer. In this way a raiser of poultry on a small scale would be able to dispose of his stock with the same facility and at as large a price as the man who raises in large quantities. The company will not only send one or more crates to those who write for them, but they will pay express charges both on the crates going empty as well as on the crates returning full. This includes the express charges, as well as on the returning crates. In this way it will be readily seen that the farmer has nothing to do but write for what crates he needs (each crate holds about 30 birds), to put his birds in the crates and send them back addressed to the company in Toronto, where the birds will arrive, and check or money order will be sent the same day in payment.

This is not only a great boon for the farmer at the present moment, but will be the means of causing an unlimited demand for early broilers in the spring at prices running from 60 to 70 cents per pair, according to the market.

There is one requisite, however, that every farmer must consider, and that is, unless the birds are strong and healthy they are of little use for exporting. The birds do not need to be fat, but they do need to be large, healthy and strong, and the sooner the farmer realizes the advantages he can obtain by raising the correct kind of birds, the sooner he will be able to make a considerable amount of money time with a mark which nothing could ever efface.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry instantly relieves pain, is astringent and soothing to the irritated bowels, has a stimulating action on the weakened system, and is a powerful disinfectant of the whole intestinal tract.

For half a century it has been recognized as the safest and best remedy for DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY, CRAMPS, COLIC, SUMMER COMPLAINT, CHOLERA MORBUS, CHOLERA INFANTUM and all fluxes of the bowels of infants or adults.

SAVED BABY BROTHER.

Miss Lizzie M. Henrick, 225 Rawdon St., Brantford, Ont., writes: "My little baby brother, one and a half years old, had a very bad attack of Cholera Infantum, and we did everything for him we knew of, but without any benefit. Finally we heard of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and got a bottle of it at once."

"The first dose helped the little fellow so much that we were fully convinced of its healing powers. We persisted in the use of the remedy and soon the baby gained strength and was able to get around again."

"Now we always keep Dr. Fowler's Strawberry in the house and find it invaluable for diarrhoea and cramps in the bowels."

PEOPLE ON THE PRAIRIE.

"I think that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the best medicine made for Diarrhoea and Summer Complaint. We never without it in the house, and consider that people living on the prairie away from doctors should always have it on hand."—Mrs. A. Matland, Butterfield P.O., Man.

Always ask for Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry and refuse imitations, many of which are worthless and some of them highly dangerous.
