practical differences.

[Chicago Tribune.] Miss Mary Yardley, who died the other day at the age of 105 years, left behind her a set of rules to the obser-vance of which is ascribed a large share of credit for the green and vigorous old age which she attained. The rules of Miss Yardley differ from those laid down by Dr. Pearsons and other fam-ous octogenarians in that many of them are possible of adoption by people generally. Especially notable is the statment that Miss Yardley owed much to the fact that she always preserved an even temper and a cheerful disposition, lows:

As for worry, it is truism that it is One of the features of the Irish picnic vesterday was a quoiting match, which proof of its truth. She made it a point was well contested, as the following to be always occupied about something, while at the same time she utterly banished worry from her life. In the better of worry is a task worthy of a philosopher and an accomplishment of which a great man may well be proud. There is even a new school of philosophers who declare that fear and Third draw-Errington 15, vs. Young worry are the fathers of all the evil n this world, and who prescribe me-hods by which the individual may get ie better of them both.

In still another direction the rules of Miss Yardley are worthy of general adoption or at least attention. She was careful not so much about her diet in the accepted use of that word as to always make her food suitable in kind and sufficient in amount to the needs of her body. Most people, it may be ta-ken for granted, eat too much, and pay too little attention to the matter of pro-viding the proper kind of fuel for the work on hand. The cook is only just beginning to be recognized as a mem-ber of the most important and neces-sary profession in the world. People have only recently realized that the human engine needs as careful attention David Arthur Adams was arrested in the matter of fuel as the mechanical power maker, which gets out of order if the proper kind of coal is not shoveled into the furnaces in the proper amounts and at the proper times.
