London, June 10.—The correspondent of the Times in the British camp at Chunglo, near Tibet, says: Yesterday while Colonel Younghusband was at Khangma, on his way to Chumbi, an attack was made on that post by a force of Tibetans. Immediately after reveille one party, under cover of some nullahs, attacked the Yaks with a Gurkha guard, which had just started on the day's journey. The Gurkhas behaved with great gallantry in what was necessarily a hand-to-hand fight, and were well supported by a few mounted infantry. Our losses were one Gurkha killed and six men wounded. retreat was turned into a rout by the from Lhassa thirteen days before, and pose of affording safe communication
